$2 MILLION OFFER BY G.E. REPORTED IN POLLUTION CASE

But Reid, Conservation Aide, Fights Terms in Discharge of PCB's Into Hudson

Official's Position in Dispute Complicates His Strained Relations With Carey

By RICHARD SEVERO
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, April 24—The General Electric Company has reportedly offered to pay the state at least $2 million to settle the controversial PCB's case, provided the payment is not cited as a penalty and the company is not required to make "restoration, reclamation or other like remedy" because of its discharge of the toxic chemical into the Hudson River.

Moreover, G. E. insists that the state sign a "good-faith clause" in which the state would say that G. E. "acted in good faith, unintentionally, and in reliance upon its [Federal pollution discharge] permit." The PCB's case involves the discharge of polychlorinated biphenyls.

The bargaining position of G. E. and Conservation Commissioner Ogden R. Reid's attitude against it has made him the renewed center of controversy. The situation complicates further Mr. Reid's already strained relations with Governor Carey.

Breaks His Silence

Mr. Reid broke his silence about the PCB's hearings over the weekend and said he had no intention of "caving in" to what he called "pressure from General Electric for its complete exoneration."

However, Mr. Reid conceded that he might be literally forced to resign "because of the orchestrated attack that has manifested itself in the news media."

"I stand ready to negotiate with General Electric in good faith, but I have no intention of selling out to them," Mr. Reid said. "It would be impossible for me to suggest to the hearing officer [Prof. Abraham D. Sofaer of the Columbia Law School] that this could be the basis for a settlement in the public interest."

The controversy came to a head this past week when an Albany newspaper, The Knickerbocker News, described Mr. Reid as hanging on to his job "only by his fingernails" and asserted that he had impaired chances for an early out-of-court settlement with G.E. The newspaper quoted aides of Governor Carey as their source for

Humphrey to Shun Jersey, Last Primary Open to Him

By R. W. APPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, April 24—Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota says he will bypass the New Jersey Presidential primary on June 8, the last one open to him, regardless of what happens in Pennsylvania on Tuesday.

Mr. Humphrey has maintained for months that he did not intend to enter any primaries, preferring to lie back and await the development of a deadlock at the Democratic Convention or in the weeks immediately preceeding it.

In recent days, a number of his associates have been pressing him to change his mind. Some had told reporters that if Jimmy Carter were stopped in the primary here by the coalition to which Mr. Humphrey has given tacit support, the Minnesotan might well decide to run in New Jersey.

Mr. Humphrey will have 48 hours after the balloting in Pennsylvania until the final deadline to enter the New Jersey race, in which 108 convention delegates are at stake. The filing deadlines have passed in all other states.

In a telephone interview from his home in Waverly, Minn., where he spent the Easter Congressional recess, the Senator said: "New Jersey is not in the picture."

Humphrey Suggests Limit

Mr. Humphrey said he had refined his plans for the period after the voting in New Jersey, California and Ohio on June 8. As he now sees matters, he said, he will make a move only if Mr. Carter or another front-runner seems likely to enter the first ballot with fewer than 1,100 of the 1,505 votes needed for the Presidential nomination.

"I figure 1,150 is the break point," he commented. "If someone gets to that point, the party would make a terrible mistake not to nominate him, and I certainly am not going to have them come to me and say, 'God, he's close to' winning, you've got to help us put it together and stop him.'"

Because of the Democrats'

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS SLOWING DECLINE

New Strength Attributed to Emphasis on Spiritual and Moral Values

By GENE I. MAEROFF
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, April 24 — The precipitous enrollment decline that threatened the existence of this country's Roman Catholic parochial schools has eased, and the schools are now drawing new strength from an emphasis on spiritual and moral values that many parents find lacking in public schools.

After a decade in which social, religious and financial influences forced the closing of more than 3,000 schools and caused enrollments to fall from 5.5 million to 3.4 million, there is a feeling among Catholic educators that the worst is behind them.

The new mood of cautious optimism was evident among the more than 15,000 lay and religious educators who gathered at McCormick Place here this week for the annual meet-

How a Man Bilked Chase of $732,000 By Duping Banker

By DENA KLEIMAN

In repeated visits to the Rockefeller Center branch of Chase Manhattan Bank, Munroe Schwebel sought more than $732,000 and got it all—just for the asking.

"The continuing gullibility of the bank, the advance of yet more and more money by the way of loans and overdrafts . . . is beyond my comprehension," said Harry T. Nusbaum, acting State Supreme Court justice, at a recent trial in Manhattan.

The trial detailed a bizarre case involving a battery of unsecured loans and overdrawn checks, a retired Taiwanese diplomat, a rare collection of Chinese paintings and a reputed confidence man, now dead, who found a friend at Chase Manhattan.

It all began late in January 1970 when Mr. Schwebel, who said he owned a large public-relations firm, walked into Chase and asked Charles Newton, the branch's manager, for a short-term loan of $50,000 for his business.

U.S. Acquiesces to Sales Of Arms to China by West

Britain and France Allowed to Bypass Allied Review Panel in Negotiations With Peking on Strategic Items

By LESLIE H. GELB
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 24—The Ford Administration, while strictly enforcing controls on American sales of military equipment to China, has quietly acquiesced to some European sales to China and to negotiations on future sales.

Senior Administration officials said that to facilitate these sales, France and Britain had been allowed to bypass the allied control mechanism to review all proposed sales of strategic items to Communist countries.

The officials said this did not constitute a policy decision but rather a disposition to send a positive signal to China without provoking the Soviet Union.

Maintains Strategic List

The only significant case thus far has been the multimillion-dollar British sale of the powerful Rolls-Royce Spey engine to China in December. Officials said that after the British had informed the Ford Administration that they would not seek allied approval for the sale, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger let them know that he would not make an issue of it.

Officials familiar with the history of the allied review panel known as Cocom, short for coordination committee, said this was the first instance of a clear-cut military item being sold to a Communist nation without formal approval.

Organized in 1949, the coordination committee is a voluntary group composed of all the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, except Iceland, and Japan. It maintains lists of strategic goods that can be sold to Communist countries only by unanimous vote. For competitive business reasons, its lists and deliberations are kept secret.

Administration officials also acknowledge that the Soviet Union tends to benefit from what they called their policy of "evenhandedness" toward Peking and Moscow on sales of military goods or such items as computers and helicopters, which could have civilian or military uses. Because the allies sell to Peking only what they will sell to Moscow, the existing military balance favoring the Soviet Union tends to be preserved.

A number of Administration officials denied a recent charge

U.S. OIL COMPANIES ARE NEGOTIATING WITH VIETNAMESE

Invited to Resume Offshore Exploration That Halted When Saigon Fell

MAJOR DEALS POSSIBLE

But Political Chill Between Washington and Hanoi Could Block Pacts

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 24—Despite a continuing chill in political relations between Hanoi and Washington, several American oil companies have been quietly invited by Vietnam to submit proposals for resuming the offshore oil exploration that was suspended when South Vietnam fell to Communist forces a year ago.

The American oil companies, as well as concerns in Canada, France, Japan and Britain, have held continuous secret negotiations with the Vietnamese and appear eager to resume drilling for oil in the potentially rich South China Sea. Information on the negotiations was provided by oil executives who wished to remain anonymous and by State Department officials.

Embargo on Trade

One top oil executive said in an interview this week that he was convinced "major contracts" would be signed this year with Hanoi to exploit the oil reserves. A New York banker who has closely followed the Vietnamese economy predicted that Vietnam was preparing "to break out of its shell" and begin signing deals with Western companies—including American ones if the current embargo on trade with Vietnam is dropped beyond the six-month no-embargo trial period about to be approved by Congress over Administration objections.

American oil industry officials said that their companies wanted to develop the oil and had received encouragement from middle-level State Department officials—but not from Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. They said that they did not know if the necessary political steps would be taken by Vietnam and the United States to make it possible for American companies to sign contracts allowing them to participate in the drilling.

Before the collapse of the Saigon regime last April, the following American companies

Franjieh, Yielding, Allows Lebanon to Pick New Chief

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, April 24—After stalling for two weeks, President Suleiman Franjieh signed a constitutional amendment today that will permit Parliament to select a new head of state.

Under intense pressure from a number of quarters—Syria, the Lebanese left and his own allies in the Phalangist Party—the 65-year-old Christian head of state affixed his signature to the amendment, which was taken by courier from his refuge near the port town of Junieh to the secretary of the Speaker at the Bristol Hotel in Beirut.

The signing of the amendment, announced over a radio station loyal to the beleaguered Christian chief, coincided with a noticeable improvement in the security situation in this city, which has been battered by a year of civil war between Lebanese Moslems and leftists on one hand and rightist Christians on the other.

A week ago radio stations opposed to Mr. Franjieh announced that he had signed the document, but this proved incorrect. The President finally signed it today.

Jubilation Voiced

"He has signed! He has signed!" shouted a jubilant woman in the Manara section of Beirut, which has lately been pummeled by right-wing artillery trying to reach a 105-millimeter howitzer near a tennis club.

Artillery shells crashed into the airport early this morning, smashing a few windows but injuring no one, and the day unfolded as one of the quietest in weeks. Cars jammed sun-drenched Hamra Street and, in return for shipments of flour to the hungry Moslem quarters of the city, 10 gasoline trucks

Unrelated Donor's Marrow Saves a Boy

By JANE E. BRODY

Matthew Ruffer, not yet 3 years old, is the only person now alive who has apparently successfully received a bone-marrow transplant from a donor unrelated to him.

He was born on July 9, 1973, his deceptively healthy-looking body unable to produce the white blood cells essential for combating infectious organisms and other foreign cells.

Diagnosis: severe combined immune deficiency disease, a rare genetic defect that perhaps 200 American children are born with each year. Life expectancy: less than one year.

Matthew spent the next two and one-half years isolated in a sterile room for protection from germs that could easily kill him, while doctors at Memorial-Sloan Kettering Cancer Center in New York tried to give him a bone marrow transplant to correct the inherited disease, which had already claimed his sister's life.

Seven weeks ago, Matthew's parents, Roger and Connie Ruffer, took him home to Fort Lee, N. J., for the first time. Coursing through the blood vessels of the blond, blue-eyed boy are cells of Danish origin—white blood cells to fight infection, platelets to help his blood clot and red blood cells to carry oxygen.

Matthew owes these cells—and his young life—to a 45-

President of Portugal Appeals For 'Dispassionate' Vote Today

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

LISBON, April 24—President Francisco da Costa Gomes urged the people of Portugal today to "reflect profoundly and dispassionately" upon the nation's interests before voting in the election tomorrow for a National Assembly.

Violence, he said in a televised address, has "cast a shadow here and there on the festival that living in liberty should constitute," an evident allusion to the stormy three weeks of campaigning for the election.

The country's new Constitution, providing for "democracy and socialism," takes effect at midnight tonight. The election tomorrow will take place two years to the day after the revolution that ended half a century of dictatorship in Portugal.

The election is not like to be decisive, for two reasons: The prospects are for a division of votes that will give the Socialists only a plurality over three other major parties; a new president, with substantive power, is to be chosen in two months.

Nonetheless, the vote is ex-

More Women Becoming Owners of Businesses

By MARYLIN BENDER

Signs are pointing toward an expanding frontier for the women's rights movement. They read "Go into business for yourself."

While there have always been instances of women who started their own businesses—some of them strikingly successful—today's feminist movement has provided impetus for more women to take the plunge into free enterprise. Many do so rather than risk a long wait for advancement in the corporate world. Others have overcome reluctance to seek bank loans for capital, and loan funds have become more readily available.

Figures about women-owned businesses have been scarce because until recently no one thought them worth compiling. The first such statistics will be published next month by the Office of Minority Business Enterprise of the Department of Commerce.

Based on tabulations from the Census Bureau, the report will show that in 1972 there were 402,025 businesses owned by women in the United States, and that they grossed $8.1 billion, or 1 percent of total receipts.

More recent figures from the Federal Small Business Administration show that in the year ending last June the agency

Lebanese Refugees Crowd a Cypriot Port

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

LARNACA, Cyprus—In hotel lobbies and seaside restaurants of this, the main languages one hears these days are French and Arabic. The conversations are sprinkled with unusual names—Phalange, Franjieh, Saiya.

Larnaca has become the main transit point for Christians of Lebanon who want to reach the outside world. Access to Beirut airport is now controlled by Moslem forces, and many Lebanese Christian travelers do not want to take the risk of going to or from it.

"I fear the sniping," said a businessman as he boarded a small cruise ship that would take him to the Christian-held port of Junieh. "No one knows who you are. I've lost so many good friends, so many innocent people who had nothing to do with politics."

Four or five ships are plying between Cyprus and Junieh. The trip takes from 8 to 14 hours, depending on the weather and the vessel. The one-way fare is about $100, more than a round-trip plane ticket.

Transit Stop for Most

Most passengers are businessmen with foreign interests who stay here only a few days while they arrange flights and visas for other countries. But as the secure Christian districts shrink in the face of Moslem advances, families who can afford to sit out the war elsewhere are starting to leave in growing numbers.

Many Christians are embarrassed by the whole situation. "I'm a very rich man," declared one construction contractor. "My family is used to flying everywhere on first-class tickets."

As he passed through customs here, another businessman added: "We have to sneak back into our own country, like we were on a submarine."

The ships heading for Lebanon also carry such scarce commodities as fresh vegetables, canned meats and gasoline. The goods are apparently sold in Junieh at premium prices, and some Christians here resent the profiteering.

"The Lebanese people are merchants in their hearts," snapped a businessman. "Money above all."

The boats also carry money in both directions. Some Christians who have lost confidence in Lebanese currency are buying dollars or sterling on the black market and transferring the cash abroad. According to port authorities, one man arrived recently with two suitcases full of gold and sat on them for eight hours until they cleared customs.

Money to Support War

Since the banks are usually closed in Lebanon and money is hard to get, some Christians with foreign accounts are importing cash to finance their own expenses and the war effort. Many of these accounts are in Arab countries, particularly in the Persian Gulf, and the Christians worry that if the Arabs realize what is going on, they might freeze the funds.

Some Christians who lost their means of livelihood during the last year are leaving Lebanon and searching for new opportunities. One young man, formerly a money changer in Beirut, was heading for Paris.

"I meet many kinds of people in my business, and have friends there," he explained as he idled away time in a hotel lobby near the port. "I can't stay like this. I must do some business. I won't steal, like so many other people in Lebanon are doing."

There is no mass exodus yet, but there is a steady trickle. Some made the decision when the schools closed recently. The rich fear kidnapping or extortion. Many began to feel that no place was permanently safe from the heavy weapons used on both sides.

The wealthy ones are going to their apartments in London or villas in the south of France. The poorer could get stranded in Cyprus and start posing problems for local authorities. All families have suffered the psychological wounds of war.

One factory owner said that his two children had become obsessed with the fighting.

Vietnamese Voting Today For a Unified Assembly

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Sunday, April 25—Almost exactly a year after Communist troops entered Saigon in triumph, North and South Vietnamese vote today to elect a joint National Assembly, part of the country's first unified government following 30 years of war and division.

There are 281 candidates, selected for their "contributions to the revolution," for the 243 seats allocated to South Vietnam. North Vietnam, with a slightly larger population, will have 249 seats, but no figure for the total number of candidates in the north was available.

Today's election is more important symbolically than it is for the new National Assembly it will create. The two part of the country have already been essentially united under the control of the North Vietnamese Army and the Lao Dong, or Workers, Party, since the Communists' victory of April 30, 1975.

Politburo Still the Real Power

Moreover, the powers of the new legislature are expected to be limited, as are those of North Vietnam's present National Assembly, with the real authority remaining in the hands of the 11-man Politburo of the Lao Dong Party. According to a broadcast by the North Vietnamese News Agency yesterday, the new Assembly will approve a constitution and choose a new flag and national anthem for the country.

Hanoi announced recently that the party would hold its fourth national congress this year, an event that specialists consider far more significant than today's election. The meeting, [illegible] specialists point out, probably will make some major and long overdue changes in the party's aging leadership. The last party congress was held in 1960.

No date has been officially set either for the party congress or the formal unification of the country, though analysts expect unification ceremonies in the next month or two.

Candidates for the National Assembly include a broad, if carefully chosen, group, ranging from the entire Politburo and several Communist generals to workers, peasants, intellectuals and even several Roman Catholic priests.

But, according to the Communists themselves, all opponents of the new government have been excluded from running and several categories of people, including former South Vietnamese officers, police officials, civil servants and members of the country's defunct political parties are not allowed to vote.

"As opposed to the capitalist countries," the North Vietnamese Army newspaper Quan Doi Nhan Dan said recently, "our National Assembly is a unified bloc that will have absolutely no factions representing private or regional interests, no conflicting viewpoints or opposition organizations."

"All past democratic practices, including the authorized existence of opposition elements under the capitalist system, were only deceitful tricks to consolidate the ruling yoke of the exploiting classes," the paper added.

A Candidate's War Role

According to the official news agency, candidates were forbidden to make speeches, and campaigning was limited to the distribution of official posters bearing the candidates' photographs and brief outlines of their "revolutionary achievements."

In South Vietnam the list of candidates is headed by Pham Hung, the fourth-ranking member of the Lao Dong Party Politburo, who, the Communists recently admitted for the first time, headed their war effort in the south for years.

In a published campaign biography, Mr. Hung was identified as having been sent south in 1967, the year before the big Lunar New Year offensive, to be "secretary of the South Vietnam Party Committee" and chief political commissar of the Communist army in the South. That would have given him political and military control over the Communist forces.

American intelligence analysts had learned of Mr. Hung's standing at the time, but Hanoi never identified him. Hanoi insisted that the National Liberation Front and the Provisional Revolutionary Government were a separate, independent southern movement, free of Hanoi control. The two bodies were what the Americans called the Vietcong.

The Communist victory last year and the coming formal unification evidently have made the fiction of a separate southern movement no longer necessary.

Since the military victory last year, Mr. Hung appears to have continued to exercise overall leadership in South Vietnam. His name has been listed repeatedly ahead of these of the head of the front, Nguyen Huu Tho, and the President of the Provisional Revolutionary Government, Huynh Than Phat. In Communist countries, the order of precedence usually indicates political ranking.

Mr. Hung, 64 years old and a native of Vinh Long Province in the Mekong delta, is one of the four members of the 11-man Politburo who was born in South Vietnam, and the only one to come from what the Vietnamese themselves consider the real south—that is, the area from Saigon to the southern coast of the delta.

The well publicized leaders of the front, Mr. Tho and Mr. Phat, as well as Nguyen Thi Binh, the Foreign Minister, are all candidates for the assembly, but how much power they will have in a newly formed government is uncertain. None are members of the Lao Dong Politburo or Central Committee, whereas Mr. Hung and several other lesser-known Communists in the south who were not leaders of the front are members of the Central Committee.

Covert Roles Disclosed

Those others include Vo Van Kiet, the head of the Saigon People's Revolutionary Committee, and Senior Lieut. Gen. Tran Van Tra, the head of the Military Management Committee that ran Saigon until recently. Their campaign biographies revealed that they had been secret members of the Central Committee in Hanoi since 1960, a fact that Hanoi apparently wanted to obscure to preserve its contention that the movement in the south was independent.

Several former opponents of the old Nguyen Van Thieu regime, members of the so-called Third Force, are also candidates, including Ngo Ba Thanh, the head of the Women's Movement for the Right to Life, and Huynh Tan Man, once head of the Saigon Students' Association. Both spent periods in jail under the Thieu Government.

In North Vietnam, the list of candidates is headed by Le Duan, the First Secretary of the party, who is the country's most powerful figure; Truong Chinh, the current head of the north's National Assembly, and Pham Van Dong, the Prime Minister.

There are also several representatives of Buddhist sects and nonethnic Montagnard tribesmen in both the north and the south.

Argentina Reports $2.5 Billion Smuggling

BUENOS AIRES, April 24 (AP) — Smuggling of goods ranging from birdseed to expensive furs amounted to $2.5 billion last year, almost equal to Argentina's export goal for the same period, the government has reported.

It was the first official estimate on smuggling since the military overthrew President Isabel Martinez de Perón on March 24.

Smuggling apparently became one of Argentina's most profitable industries during the chantic economic situation in 1975, the military chief of the customs department, Rear Adm. Hector Dominguez, said at a news conference.

Admiral Dominguez said that authorities last June seized 250 tons of birdseed intended for smuggling to Paraguay. Later authorities stopped 2,500 furs.

U.S. EASING STAND ON ARMS FOR CHINA

by former Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger that the Government was "prepared to provide technology, or economic assistance to our reputed foe [the Soviet Union] while denying similar kinds of arrangements with a quasi-ally [China].

They acknowledged, however, that certain Western computers had been sold to Moscow and not to Peking. They explained that this was because Peking, unlike Moscow, was reluctant to provide statements on how the computers would be used and was unwilling to allow inspection.

The officials also cited the 1974 sale of Super Frelon helicopters to China by Aerospatiale of France as an instance where Cocom approval could have been sought by France though Paris was not pressed to do so by the Administration. They added, however, that the helicopters involved in this transaction were the civilian model of the Super Frelon. It was, therefore, arguable whether Cocom should have been consulted.

Reports of Japanese Talks

German officials are keeping the State Department informed about current discussions between the Messerschmitt-Bölkow-Blohm Company and China on the B-0105 helicopter. This is an advanced model that could be used for civilian or military purposes.

There are also reports of a Japanese company negotiating on the sale of patrol aircraft to China.

A top Administration official explained that "our overall set is to be helpful to China within limits." "And China has its own limits in exposing its need for and increasing its dependence on Western technology," he added.

"When the Chinese go out to buy, they prefer to deal with our allies," the official noted. "They basically come to us for those items they can't buy elsewhere, like the most advanced computers."

The officials said that Mr. Kissinger had repeatedly told Chinese leaders that the United States had a vital concern in maintaining the Chinese-Soviet balance of power but that he had not spelled out what this meant.

"There is no question that the Soviets have expressed nervousness about direct U.S.-China military sales," an official explained. "If their worst fears are realized, it would affect their behavior toward us in a fundamental way."

China Is Permitting Small Group to Live Outside the System

CHING HUNG, China, April 21 (Agence France-Presse)—In China's Yunnan Province, near the Laotian border, dwell the only known people who, with the approval of the authorities, live outside the country's Communist system.

About 100 people, in 20 families, they are from the Lahu and Pulang national minorities. They have refused to go along with the system of communes and belong to no state production units.

Their existence was disclosed last week in Ching Hung, the capital of an autonomous prefecture inhabited by several minority groups by the revolutionary committee's deputy chairman, Tao Chih-kuo.

Mr. Tao told journalists visiting this tropical region that the 20 families lived mainly off hunting and fishing and were authorized to sell their game and fish to the state agencies.

Mr. Tao said these people lived "deep in the mountains," had "few contacts" with civilization and made their own arms—even rifles, from steel tubes sold to them by the state.

According to Mr. Tao, the group in no way opposes the regime, its members are not "outlaws" and they "followed party policy." However, they still refuse to recognize the "superiority of collective life," he added.

Mr. Tao said these people remained "the victims of superstitions"—mostly religious ones—and were undergoing "education" by party representatives who visited them regularly.

He said that their attitude was a result of an "insufficient knowledge of the benefits of the party's policy," and added that theirs was the only case in China of individuals living in such a way outside the system.

Sri Lanka to Bar Tourists During Nonaligned Parley

COLOMBO, Sri Lanca, April 24 (UPI) — The Sri Lanka Government has announced that no foreign tourists will be permitted to enter the country in August when a conference of nonaligned nations is scheduled.

This is part of the Government's effort to insure the success of the meeting in which more than 80 delegations and 50 heads of states will take part.

An official announcement said that only delegates and reporters assigned to cover the conference would be permitted to land on the island, formerly called Ceylon. The conference will be held from Aug. 9 through Aug. 19.

KISSINGER BEGINS HIS TOUR IN KENYA

Associates U.S. With 'Great Aspirations of Africa'

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN
Special to The New York Times

NAIROBI, Kenya, April 24—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger began his African visit here tonight by declaring that he sought to identify "the aspirations of Africa with the aspirations of the United States."

Speaking on his arrival at Nairobi's airport, Mr. Kissinger, who is scheduled to visit seven African nations on his first official visit to the continent, said: "I have come here to make clear that the United States associates itself with the two great aspirations of Africa—the aspiration to human dignity and racial equality and the aspiration to economic progress."

In a reference to the problem of possible support for African liberation movements in Rhodesia, Mr. Kissinger affirmed that the "future must be shaped by Africa," and he asserted that he had not come "to line up one group of African nations or one group of African movements against another."

Charge by Rhodesian

This may have been an allusion to the charge made earlier this week by Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the leader of one Rhodesian nationalist faction, that Mr. Kissinger was intent upon building up "puppet regimes" in those countries where "majority rule was imminent."

Regarding the continent's economic development, Mr. Kissinger said that after exchanging views with African leaders he would end his visit with an address to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in Nairobi. He said that he would put forth the "American conception of how the nations of the world, rich and poor, developed and undeveloped, north and south, can cooperate for their common betterment."

After a scheduled visit with President Jomo Kenyatta of Kenya tomorrow morning, Secretary Kissinger is to fly to Tanzania. His itinerary also includes stops in Zambia, Zaire, Ghana, Liberia and Senegal.

Urges Rhodesia Talks

Special to The New York Times

LONDON, April 24—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, before leaving here for a tour of seven African nations, acknowledged today that the United States was determined to seek early majority rule in Rhodesia.

Mr. Kissinger spoke to newsmen at Waddington Royal Air Force Base in Lincolnshire, about 100 miles northwest of London, after a two-hour breakfast meeting with the new Foreign Secretary, Anthony Crosland. Mr. Kissinger said that the discussion was "valuable."

He strongly supported the statement last month by James Callaghan who was then Foreign Secretary and is now Prime Minister, that the white minority Government in Rhodesia must soon move toward black majority rule.

Mr. Kissinger said: "We believe that time is running out, but the opportunity for a negotiated settlement that may still exist must be seized almost immediately.

'Our Full Support'

"As far as the United States is concerned, we will give our full support to the immediate resumption of negotiations designed to bring about majority rule in the near future," he added.

Mr. Kissinger said that he believed it was in the interest not only of the black majority but also of the white settlers in Rhodesia that negotiations toward majority rule should succeed.

He said that the United States did not support one black nationalist group over another and believed that the solution to the problem must be sought "by African methods in Africa."

Mr. Kissinger flew to the air force base this morning, accompanied by the American Ambassador to Britain, Ann Armstrong. He arrived in London late yesterday, spent the night at Claridge's Hotel and flew to the air base to accommodate Mr. Crosland, who traditionally spends his Saturdays in his parliamentary constituency in nearby Grimsby.

Important Contribution

Mr. Crosland, speaking to reporters, said that Mr. Kissinger's support of Mr. Callaghan's statement was an important contribution to efforts to find a solution to the Rhodesian problem.

He affirmed the British Government's position not to take any initiative until "there is some sign that the white Rhodesians are prepared to accept an early move toward majority rule."

Mr. Crosland added that he believed there was an increasing realization among white Rhodesians that minority rule cannot survive. But, he said, it had not yet reached the point where Ian O. Smith, the Rhodesian Prime Minister, was willing to hold serious negotiations about majority rule.

After the talks this morning, Mr. Kissinger flew to Nairobi, Kenya.

SOVIET SEES U.S. LOSING BUSINESS

TV Panel Says $1.6-Billion of Orders Have Been Given by Moscow to Others

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, April 24—A Soviet economist asserted today that the collapse of the Soviet-American trade agreement 15 months ago had cost the United States as much as $1.6 billion in Soviet orders that were placed elsewhere.

But Ivan D. Ivanov, a specialist on Soviet-American economic relations, acknowledged that the Soviet Union was itself forced to scrap plans for some joint projects previously envisaged for the new five-year plan. He further said that it had incurred a higher foreign-trade deficit by declining to accept the American trade bill, which linked credits and favorable tariff reductions to a Soviet policy of freer emigration.

The disclosures were made during a nationally televised round-table discussion on Soviet-American relations. The admission of Soviet difficulties was considered new by several Western economic analysts.

An American commercial source confirmed that the $1.6 billion figure had been advanced by Soviet foreign trade officials in private conversations. He agreed that it reflected a loss of sales to other Western countries, but questioned whether American business would really have retained as much as the Russians suggested they might have.

Picture Generally Hopeful

The half-hour discussion, which was led by Valentin M. Berezhkov, the editor of the Soviet journal USA—Economy, Politics, Ideology, painted an otherwise generally hopeful picture of the future of Soviet-American accommodation at a time when the relationship has been subjected to harsher scrutiny by the American election campaign.

The Soviet press has responded by stepping up its own criticism of the United States. But today's television program appeared intended to assure the Soviet public that détente would continue in the face of present frictions. Soviet insiders have attributed the American criticism to election-year speeches though there is some concern that it could have more lasting impact.

Despite the somewhat cooler atmosphere, American diplomats say they have found Soviet officials still eager to keep up the momentum of the détente relationship, in which the Soviet party chief, eLonid I. Brezhnev, has invested his personal prestige.

The television discussion also alluded to the deadlock over a new accord on the limitation of strategic arms though avoided predicting the outcome. The Soviet analysts were somewhat milder than the Soviet press has been in blaming Washington for the delay.

Arms Accord Stressed

Mikhail A. Milshtein, a retired army lieutenant general who is an arms-control specialist, told viewers that the existing arms agreements formed "the central core of our relations with the United States." He insisted that the Soviet Union was not trying to exploit the agreements to gain a nuclear edge as some American critics have charged.

However, the Soviet arms specialist repeated the Kremlin's contention that the development of a new American cruise missile was inconsistent with the agreement outlined by Mr. Brezhnev and President Ford at Vladivostok in November 1974.

"This, of course, may cause a new spiral in the arms race and bring to nothing at all the agreements that exist now," said Dr. Milshtein.

The new accord is stalemated primarily over whether the cruise missile and the Soviet long-range bomber, code-named Backfire by the West, should be included in the pact, which limits each side to 2,400 delivery systems, of which 1,300 may carry multiple independently targeted warheads. A few Soviet insiders privately doubt that an agreement can be reached during the election campaign.

U.S. Skepticism Explained

In explaining American skepticism about détente, another analyst, Genrikh A. Trofiminko, told viewers that some Americans "cannot reconcile themselves with the fact that the United States has to shift from illusion of superiority to the practice of equal relations."

"It's a painful process for people who used to think hegomistically," he said.

In discussing economic relations, Dr. Ivanov said the trade agreement failure in January 1975 had "created certain problems" for the Soviet Union.

"In particular, we had to halt negotiations on a number of large projects that were included, by the way, in the 10th five-year plan, and trade has still not been balanced because Soviet goods cannot break through the barrier of high customs tariffs," the economist said.

Last year, the Soviet Union ran a deficit of more than $1.5 billion in trade with the United States because of heavy purchases of grain and machinery.

West Bank Students Clash With Troops

TEL AVIV, April 24 (UPI)—Hundreds of rock-throwing Arab students clashed with Israeli troops in the West Bank town of Nablus today, blocking a road and waving a Palestine Liberation Organization flag.

Arab informants said two of the youths were injured as Israeli troops chased jeering students from the courtyard of Gamal Abdel Nasser High School.

The youths were protesting a recent march by a Jewish religious group on the West Bank. The group was demonstrating for the retention of the occupied area under Israeli rule.

The Israeli Justice Minister, Yaakov Zadok, told a symposium of the governing Labor Party that Israeli militants such as the Gush Emunim movement that organized the demonstration "are undermining democracy and should be opposed."

Bhutto Denies India Initiated Talks

IZMIR, Turkey, April 24 (Reuters)—Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto of Pakistan denied today that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India had taken the initiative in ending the deadlock over contacts between the two countries. Reports to that effect had appeared in the Western press.

He said: "On the contrary, it was I who wrote to Mrs. Gandhi on March 29 and in this letter I told her that in order to break the stalemate, I am withdrawing Pakistan's case with the I.C.A.O. so that progress can be made on normalization of relations."

Colombia Enacts Press Curb

BOGOTA, Colombia, April 24 (AP)—The Colombian Government has enacted a controversial press law that the Inter-American Press Association fears could lead to official interference with news reporting.

The decree regulating the profession of journalism in Colombia went into effect when it was published in the local press yesterday.

President Alfonso López Michelsen said the law was aimed at what he called the "sensationalist press, the press which irresponsibly uses headlines to create situations of opinion."

Under the decree, the Education Ministry becomes responsible for the regulation of journalism. Violators may be fined up to $300.

BUENOS AIRES, April 24 (Reuters)—Argentina's new military Government has prohibited local newspapers from reporting terrorist activities, abductions or other news items likely to benefit subversive groups," unless these are officially announced.

Director Deplores F.A.O. Bureaucracy

LIMA, Peru, April 24 (AP)—The director of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization said today that his agency's work was ineffectual because of its large bureaucracy and he called for a complete reorganization.

Edouard Saouma told an F.A.O. conference here that 80 percent of the agency's budget was "destined to pay for a gigantic centralized bureaucracy in Rome, 11 percent to put out publications that no one reads and the remaining 9 percent to holding meetings and for travel expenses that are largely unnecessary."

The Lebanese diplomat said that hardly a dollar goes for agricultural development in Latin America.

U.S. May Limit Data on Lockheed

WASHINGTON, April 24 (AP)—The Justice Department said today that it might stop giving Lockheed payoff information to the Italian Government because of apparent violations of a secrecy agreement.

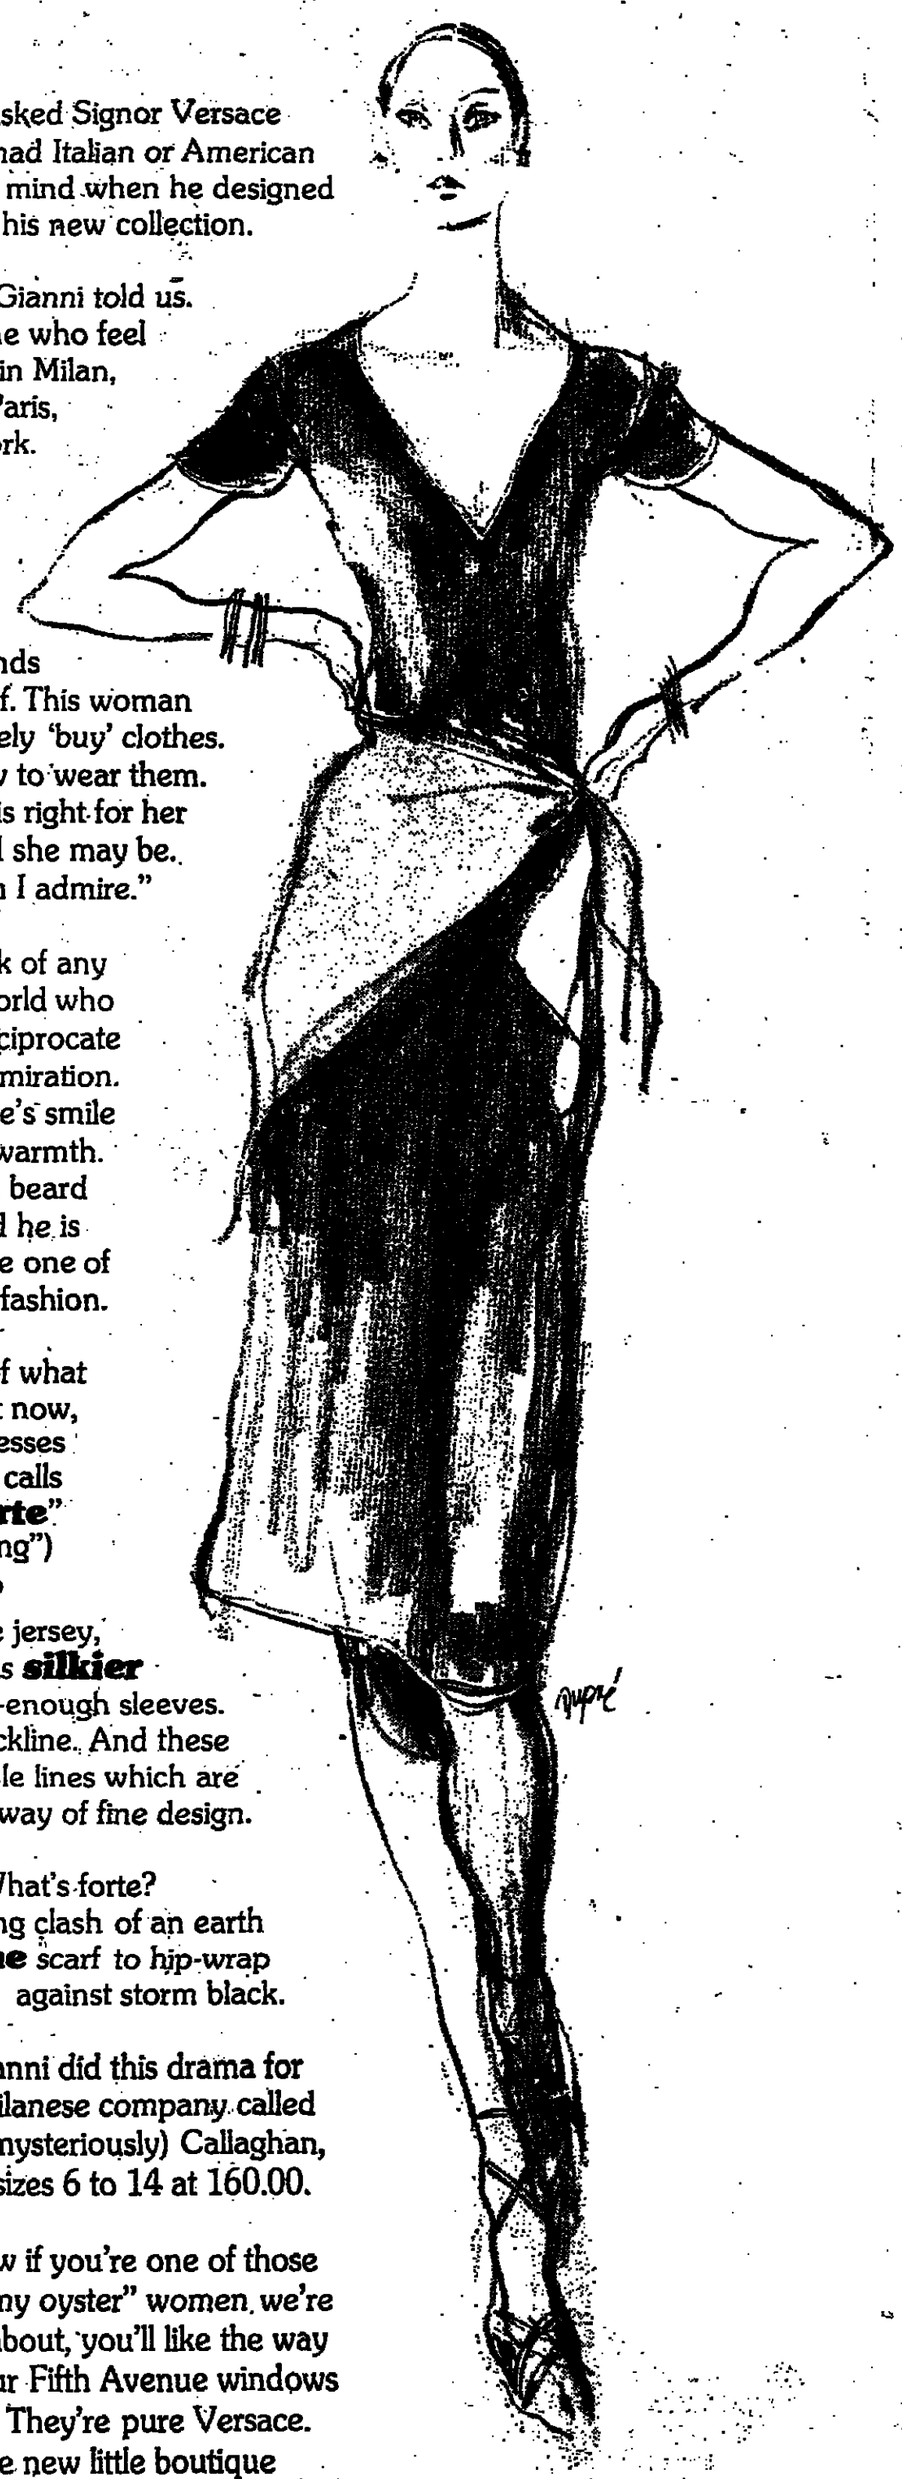
Assistant Attorney General Richard Thornburgh said that articles in the Italian press about Lockheed payoffs indicate that documents provided to Italian law-enforcement authorities may have been improperly disclosed."

"I think she is a true woman of the world" answered designer Gianni Versace

We had asked Signor Versace whether he'd had Italian or American women in mind when he designed his new collection.

"Neither, neither," Gianni told us. "There are some who feel at home only in Milan, or only in Paris, or only in New York.

"But the woman I have in my mind's eye while I work is the one who understands the world, and herself. This woman does not merely 'buy' clothes. She knows how to wear them. She knows what is right for her wherever in the world she may be. That is the woman I admire."



And we can't think of any women of the world who wouldn't reciprocate the admiration. Gianni Versace's smile has genuine Latin warmth. He has a dark beard and dark eyes. And he is surprisingly young to be one of Milan's maestros of fashion.

To give you an idea of what Versace's up to right now, we've sketched one of the dresses from a new group he calls "dolce e forte" ("sweet and strong")

What's sweet? This soft flow of matte jersey, in a rayon that feels silkier than silk. These tiny, just-enough sleeves. This young, deep neckline. And these deceptively simple lines which are the dead give-away of fine design.

What's forte? The daring clash of an earth and flame scarf to hip-wrap against storm black.

Gianni did this drama for a Milanese company called (mysteriously) Callaghan, in sizes 6 to 14 at 160.00.

Now if you're one of those "world is my oyster" women we're talking about, you'll like the way we've done our Fifth Avenue windows this week. They're pure Versace. And so is the new little boutique in our Designer's Shop on three. It's one more spot where you'll feel very much at home. We'll entertain you with informal modeling tomorrow from 12:30 till 2.

FRENCH REDS SHIFT STAND ON DEFENSE

Softening of Attitude Toward Nuclear Force Seen Partly as a Political Tactic

By JAMES F. CLARITY
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, April 24—The French Communist Party has made a cautious but potentially significant move to soften its steadfast opposition to the maintenance of France's nuclear strike forces.

The move, made by a party defense specialist at a recent quasi-official conference that was attended by a prominent retired French general, is being taken seriously by the Ministry of Defense as well as by diplomatic analysts.

Both the Defense Ministry and the analysts feel that the public softening of the anti-strike-force attitude is partly a political tactic but that it also reflects a probable re-evaluation within the party of its defense policy. The Communists have long denounced the existence of the nuclear force created under de Gaulle.

The potential significance of the move, the analysts say, is that it could signal another major Communist effort to persuade voters that it is a nationalist-oriented, rather than Moscow-aligned, party. For the last six months, the French Communists have been gradually dropping unpopular orthodox Communist positions in an effort to improve their image.

Assails Kissinger Statements

The analysts said it seemed unlikely that the Communist move was designed directly to respond to statements by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger of the United States' opposition to Communists gaining political power in Western Europe. The Communists have denounced Mr. Kissinger's statements as interference in French national affairs.

The party itself has been treating the defense issue gingerly in recent days, after the publication in daily newspapers and a weekly magazine of a purported summary of the remarks made at the conference by Louis Baillot, a Communist member of the National Assembly who is considered the party's defense expert.

Humanité, the party newspaper, has not published the summary but has printed a brief statement by Mr. Baillot saying that the published summaries of his remarks were not completely true. Still, Mr. Baillot's statement was far less than a categorical denial, and the party's official silence was widely interpreted as evidence that the issue was still considered highly sensitive inside the party.

While there was no official party statement on the defense issue, Friday's Humanité carried a brief account of the conference in which Mr. Baillot was said to have acknowledged that he stated in essence that "the nuclear force presents itself as a fact, and it is impossible not to recognize this."

Electoral Unity Accord

But nowhere in the article did Humanité remind its readers that in the Communist-Socialist electoral unity agreement of 1972, which is still in effect and frequently quoted by the Communists, the defense platform calls bluntly for "renunciation of the nuclear strategic force in any form whatsoever," as well as for the immediate end to production for the force and the reconversion of the "nuclear military industry" to "peaceful nuclear industry."

Mr. Baillot, who has refused to make any other comment on the matter, discussed the party's defense policy on April 8 at a meeting of a committee of the Foundation for General Defense Studies, headed by Georges Buis, a retired general who now writes on military affairs. According to the published summaries, Mr. Baillot told the committee that "nuclear weaponry can be considered as an element of political independence." These words, the analysts say, amount to a marked shift from the Communists' long-held policy of total denunciation of the nation's nuclear strike force, which includes two squadrons of intermediate-range missiles, three batalions of nuclear surface-to-surface missiles, nine squadrons of Mirage IV-A bombers and at least four submarines capable of launching nuclear projectiles.

Tactical Political Maneuver

The Defense Ministry, according to a well-informed source there, considers the Communist move "with some seriousness." The source said that the ministry felt the move was also a tactical political maneuver designed to gain public support among conservatives, and particularly with Gaullist party voters, among whom the maintenance of an independent nuclear strike force—the force de frappe—is a vital political credo.

The new Communist move on defense policy apparently made no reference to France's relations with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. At present, France maintains military liaison with the alliance but retains independent control of its conventional and nuclear forces.

PARIS HAS DESIGN TO SPUR ECONOMY

Innovative Five-Year Plan Envisions High Growth, Million New Jobs

By CLYDE FARNSWORTH
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, April 24—The French Government has just introduced its seventh five-year plan, which seeks to set the broad lines of French economic and social development between now and 1980.

Emphasizing high growth as the only way of achieving full employment, the plan—a year in preparation—is seen as a major political charter, establishing policy objectives to increase standards of living for 53 million French people.

Consistent with President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing's approach to economic management, the seventh plan, unlike its predecessors, does not lay down specific targets.

Instead, it outlines areas for "priority action" to achieve its overall goals of creating a million additional jobs, an annual average growth rate of 5.5 to 6 percent, a one-third cut in the inflation rate to 6 percent, and an increase of 3 percent annually in workers' real purchasing power.

In effect, the planners are proposing what Government programs should receive priority when the annual budget allocations are made.

The entire planning project still has to be approved by the National Assembly. This approval is expected some time before the summer.

How Plan Is Drafted

The plan is drafted in France by what is known as the commissariat, a body of civil servants that meets with industry and labor representatives during the extensive preparatory phases.

In the past as many as 3,000 persons were occupied in the drafting exercise, and the commissariat was given great authority. Its first chief was Jean Monnet, who later went to the French Foreign Ministry as an aide to Foreign Minister Robert Schuman and who is generally considered the founder of the European Common Market.

The original concept was of a mechanism that would lie somewhere between the rigid, obligatory targets of the Soviet-style five-year plan and a free interplay of market forces.

Under President Giscard d'Estaing, the commissariat, while still managed by ambitious young technocrats, has lost some of its authority and has become more of a coordinating ministry under the direct responsibility of Prime Minister Jacques Chirac.

While his predecessors elaborated comprehensive plans with precise targets for the major industrial sectors, Jean Ripert, the current director of the commissariat, has concentrated on a small list of priority areas.

These are: To reinforce the dynamism of the economy; to restore the balance of payments; to insure full employment; to reduce social inequalities; to improve the quality of life, and to promote scientific research.

'A List of Pious Wishes'

"What you have now," said one Paris banker, a critic of the exercise, "is a list of pious wishes to soothe feelings."

The plan envisages large sums of money spent in priority sectors, altogether the equivalent of more than $40 billion over the five years.

By far the largest single expenditure is on modernizing France's telephone system. Nearly 20 billion will be spent during the period to increase the number of phones in the country from seven million to 15 million by 1980.

That effort is expected to create as many as 90,000 new jobs.

Large sums are also to be invested in roads, railway lines and canal systems, in low-cost housing, educational facilities, hospitals, and the building of new towns.

The plan looks forward to new trading surpluses for France—the accounts have recently gone into deficit—and anticipates the spending of $900 million to promote exports through aid to exporting companies and improvement of official export services.

To get the rate of inflation down in France, the plan relies on simply more intensified competition in the French economy, and does not set up any form of income policy. Some critics see the absence of more direct restraints on prices as a major weakness of the document.

"Growth can be strong only on condition that it is agreeable," the plan report says, underscoring one of its central themes, that there must be real efforts made to improve the working environment. Among other things, the plan envisages a reduction in the work week to 40 hours, from the present 44, before 1980.

"The plan seeks above all," says Mr. Ripert, "to be a program of action adopted to our economic and social structures, to our mentality, our behavior. We must adapt work to our workers, to their cultural level, to their aspirations."

Czechoslovakia Is Importing Vietnamese Workers

By MALCOLM W. BROWNE
Special to The New York Times

PRAGUE, April 19—Czechoslovakia is importing increasing numbers of Vietnamese workers, partly to train them in new technologies and partly to offset this country's chronic labor shortage.

The sight of newly arrived Vietnamese taking weekend strolls around this old city has become common, and most of them apparently are working in the Prague area.

A senior official of the Czechoslovak State Planning Commission disclosed that 3,600 Vietnamese workers are in Czechoslovakia, and 1,400 are on the way.

In most cases, the Vietnamese will reportedly remain here for about two years, learning manufacturing skills.

The Vietnamese here are joining a pool of more than 20,000 foreign workers already employed in Czechoslovakia, whose economy, with that of East Germany, is the most advanced in the Soviet bloc.

Some 1,500 Greek Cypriots—the first group imported from a non-Communist country — are expected here this month. The planning official said negotiations were under way to bring in between 5,000 and 7,000 more.

The largest single group of foreign workers already employed here are the Poles, about 17,000 of them. Most work in factories near the Polish border. There are also several thousand Yugoslavs, Hungarians and Bulgarians working in the country.

"The use of foreign workers is not a conceptual remedy for our labor shortage," one official said. "We believe we must rely basically on our own labor resources. We are using foreign labor to build particular installations and for particular jobs, not on an indefinite, long-term basis."

Yugoslav workers, for example, work directly for Yugoslav enterprises under contract to the Czechoslovak Government for special construction projects.

Compared with Czechoslovakia's total domestic labor force of seven million, foreign workers, of course, represent a minute proportion. But there are more here than in other Soviet-bloc nations, and indications are that Prague would be glad to bring in still more.

THE PRESS IN SPAIN ENJOYING A BOOM

Franco's Death and Promise of More Democracy Spur Plans for New Papers

By HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times

MADRID, April 24—Spain is enjoying a kind of journalistic springtime.

The death of Generalissimo Francisco Franco last November and the promise of more democratic times is having a catalytic effect on the press in a country that, compared with the rest of Western Europe, does not read very much.

The first newspaper in Catalan since the end of the civil war in 1939 appeared on the streets of Barcelona and other Catalonian cities and towns yesterday. On May 4, Madrid will have its first new general readership daily since 1967, and three others are planned for the fall.

"After 40 years of obscurantism there is a lot to do to catch up," said Juan Tomás de Salas, the director of Diário 16, which will appear in Madrid in the fall. "Franco was never interested in having an active press and those that existed had a closed market without competition," he said.

Hope for a Trend

Permission for the publication of Avui, the new Barcelona paper, was not granted until January. Madrid's new daily, El País, was authorized last November after a four-year wait.

Avui—"today"—highly nationalistic, though conservative, is starting out with less than $1 million in capital that was raised from some 30,000 people. Its editors say they hope it will lead to the start of other Catalan newspapers, after a long period during which the Catalan language went through various phases of repression.

Two monthlies and two weeklies now appear in Catalan, and there is a daily radio program in Catalan. Barcelona also has eight general-interest newspapers in Spanish, including La Vanguardia Española, which, at 225,000, has the highest newspaper circulation in the country.

Avui quickly sold out its press run of 100,000 copies yesterday morning. Of 36 pages, nine were devoted to Catalonia, fewer than two to the rest of Spain. Spanish news outside the region is being handled by the same desk that deals with foreign events.

500 Holding Shares

El País—"the country"—is the most ambitious of the new projects, with one of the most modern plants in Europe, including all-electronic production. It is starting with a capital of $3.4 million spread among more than 500 shareholders who represent some of the leading figures of the political, business, and intellectual communities.

The shareholders are varied: they include a man in jail and the man who put him there. Ramón Tamames, a prominent leftist economist and political opposition leader, is in Carabanchel Prison, outside Madrid, in lieu of a fine for trying to organize an illegal demonstration. Manuel Fraga Iribarne, the Minister of the Interior, is in charge of the police.

El País seeks young intellectual readers in the liberal professions, the universities, and the business and political worlds who are of the post-civil war generation. Darío Valcárcel, the assistant publisher, says: "There are a lot of people who remained aloof from political life, but are now interested in public affairs."

Success Is Doubted

In the Ministry of Information, with which all new publications have to register, there is much head shaking about the new ventures' chances of success. Officials point to statistics compiled by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization that place Spain toward the bottom of the list of Western European countries in terms of newspaper readership.

In Spain, there are 89 newspaper buyers for every 1,000 people. Sweden has 510 per 1,000, and Britain 422. Japan comes closest to the Spanish level, with 142. The United States has 314 per 1,000.

But Mr. de Salas and Mr. Valcárcel rejected the idea that the reading population must necessarily remain a small, fixed quantity.

"After being submitted to 40 years of dictatorship, newspapers are not read because they are bad," Mr. de Salas said. Mr. Valcárcel agreed, and said that with an aggressive news policy, El País would attract new readers, not merely cut into the readership of the three morning papers in Madrid.

National-Readership Goal

El País will also try to be a national newspaper and, with strong emphasis on regional news, it hopes to have 40 percent of its circulation outside the Madrid area. In the Madrid morning field, the conservative monarchist A.B.C. and the equally conservative Ya, with strong links to the Roman Catholic hierarchy, sell some 400,000 copies between them. Arriba, a state-owned newspaper, is a poor third, with a circulation between 30,000 and 40,000. A few weeks ago a fourth morning paper, Diario Nuevo, folded.

American Oil Companies Hold Secret Meetings With Vietnames

were involved in drilling off the South Vietnam coast: Union Texas, Skelly, Marathon, Mobil, Shell, United States, Cities Service and Exxon.

Mobil and Shell both made discoveries of oil but had to leave Vietnam before being able to test their finds conclusively, industry officials said.

All the companies, with the exception of Exxon, have told State Department officials of their interest in negotiating a return to Vietnam to try to recoup on their multimillion dollar investment.

In contrast with the consistent cordiality shown by Hanoi toward the American oil companies during the secret negotiations in Paris over the last year, Government-to-Government relations have been uneven and now are marked by polemics and no sign of an early thaw.

After the initial shock over the Communist victory in South Vietnam passed, the Ford Administration made major efforts to reassure other Asian allies of continuing American support.

This was followed last summer and fall by the first tentative signals to Hanoi about possible Washington interest in a new relationship with Vietnam

But more recently the initial exchanges of diplomatic messages have not proved fruitful. And the situation has been exacerbated by the American political campaign.

President Ford, irritated by Ronald Reagan's charge that he was too accommodating to the Vietnamese Communists, said on Thursday that "under no circumstances do we contemplate recognizing North Vietnam."

A trade embargo was imposed on Vietnam in May. All assest in this country were frozen—a total of about $80 million to $90 million. In South Vietnam about $50 million in American assets were seized.

The shift in Vietnam hit the oil companies particularly hard. Beginning in 1972, the Saigon government had sold exploration rights to nine oil groups. These companies had spent an estimated $100 million in preliminary exploration and drilling by the time Saigon fell, when they were forced to remove their rigs.

One oil executive said that the companies had done enough exploration to believe "commercial quantities" were available.

Last July oil executives told State Department officials that they would like to negotiate with the Vietnamese, even though they could not sign any business transaction because of the embargo.

The department, acbording to both Administration officials and oil executives, said it would not encourage such talks, but neither would it discourage them.

The first talks were held in Paris last July. The Vietnamese representatives were former Vietcong officials from South Vietnam and the atmosphere was "excellent," according to a participant.

The Vietnamese said that the old agreements with Saigon were null and void and that new arrangements would have to be negotiated. But they stressed how interested they were in having the American companies back.

In the discussions, however, the Vietnamese mentioned that they expected the United States Government to live up to a prior commitments to provide economic aid—a promise that Washington has renounced as the result of Hanoi's alleged violation of other parts of the 1973 Paris cease-fire accord.

By last fall, the South Vietnamese were pressing the American companies to come up with specific proposals. At the same time, the American officials discovered that a new North Vietnamese energy agency was negotiating with French and Japanese companies.

This persuaded the American companies that Hanoi was the real power and they decided to negotiate with the North Vietnamese in Paris instead of the South Vietnamese.

The North Vietnamese reaction, according to American oil executives, was: "Delighted to have you; no problem in having you drill offshore; give us a proposal."

As the negotiations progressed, the North Vietnamese enlarged the scope of the possible deal and suggested that the American companies not only agree to drill for oil but also agree to build refineries, petrochemical plants and other industrial enterprises throughout Vietnam.

Since this would be a multibillion-dollar operation, based on anticipated oil finds, the American companies were reluctant to make commitments without accurate information on how much oil might be available.

"Progress began to bottom out," one official said because of the Hanoi insistence on a grandiose package. But in November and December Hanoi sought advice from Sonatrach, the state oil compa of Algeria, and the Algeri advised the Vietnamese to d the large-scale plans and "t out first if you have oil."

By February, the Americ said, Hanoi was beginning see the light" and was ag urging that proposals be ma just for drilling rights.

At about this time, a G gressional committee was ho ing talks with the North Vi namese in Paris and later Hanoi to obtain additional formation on the 800 Ame cans still listed as missing action and on about 2,000 w have been declared dead b about whom little informati is available.

To encourage the North Vie namese to be more forthcor ing, the House Internation Relations Committee accepte an amendment offered by Re resentative Jonathan B. Bing ham, Democrat of the Bronx that would lift the trade embar go at least temporarily.

Spain Acts to Clear Way for a Referendum in June

By HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times

MADRID, April 24—In an important step toward holding a popular referendum on political changes as early as June, new rules have been imposed on Parliament to prevent a filibuster by conservatives who form a majority of the chamber.

The changes in parliamentary rules, decreed by the Speaker, Torcuato Fernández Miranda, after consultation with the Government and with King Juan Carlos I, establishes an emergency procedure that would impose a deadline of 25 days for voting on a bill. A 10-day deadline for amendments and another 10-day deadline to report a bill out of committee would also be part of the new procedure.

In his first public speech since November, when he announced the death of Franco, Prime Minister Carlos Arias Navarro will address the country over radio and television Wednesday and is expected to announce the referendum then. The vote is likely to involve two constitutional changes, one in the law of royal succession and one providing for a two-house legislature with the lower house elected by universal suffrage. A referendum is obligatory for changes that affect the Constitution.

The faster procedure in Parliament would allow a referendum in late June in keeping with the wishes of those members of the Government pushing hardest for reform. The thinking of this group, which includes Foreign Minister José Maria de Areilza, Interior Minister Manuel Fraga Iribarne and Justice Minister Antonio Garrigues, is that the Government is losing its credibility because of the delays up to now and is allowing right-wing opposition to build up.

Completion of the reform measures by June would allow general elections in the fall for a new Parliament. One important objection to the June referendum has been raised on the technical ground that voter registration is not up to date. Against this position is the feeling that the Government urgently needs popular support to fight off rightists, who think it is going too far, and liberals and leftists, who think it is not going far enough.

Three important changes—on the right of assembly, the right of political association and on revisions in the penal code—are now before Parliament together with a package of what are supposed to be urgent economic measures. The new emergency procedure could be applied to all or some of them. It is expected, in any case, to be applied to the bill lowering the age for ascending the throne from 30 to 18 and allowing women to reign and to the bill on a two-house Parliament. Work on the two bills has virtually been completed by the Government and they are expected to be introduced into Parliament in the next two weeks.

The legislators would then complete action by the end of May. While the new procedures would ward off delaying tactics, they are not a protection against rejection of any of the legislation. However, there is no precedent since the present regime was established in 1939 for such parliamentary defiance. No matter what their reservations about political changes, the deputies, moreover, are expected to take account of popular will, which, on the basis of various polls, appears to be backing the King and changes by a big majority.

TOP ITALIAN PARTY SETS CRUCIAL TEST

Confidence Motion May Lead to National Elections

By ALVIN SHUSTER
Special to The New York Times

ROME, April 24—The governing Christian Democrats decided today to seek a vote of confidence in Parliament next week, a move that could lead to national elections this June.

The decision was designed to bring an early end to the uncertainty over whether Italian voters would go to the polls a year ahead of schedule in an election that could lead to a share of national power for the Communist Party.

For days now, there has been talk of elections, given the political, economic and monetary crisis, but there has been no word from the Christian Democrats of just how they would collapse. So they met for five hours today in an executive committee meeting and decided against another round of talks among party leaders, including the Communists, and against simply giving up and resigning.

Put Onus on Socialists

Instead, they chose to attempt to put the onus clearly on the Socialist Party for any forthcoming need for elections. For the Socialist Party, which touched off the crisis by threatening to withdraw tacit support for the Government, has 61 seats in the 630-seat Chamber of Deputies and holds the balance in the crucial vote of concidence.

The party has also been engaged in some serious internal fighting over the next chapter of the crisis. The left wing has been insisting on entering the elections under the present Prime Minister, Aldo Moro. The center and right of the party want a change of prime ministers.

Moreover, the party has been in turmoil over Italian newspaper reports this week linking one of three prominent members of the party to the bribery scandals of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation. Based on documents sent to Rome by a United States Senate subcommittee, the reports said a former prime minister had demanded payment in connection with the sale of C-130 transport planes to the air force.

Three Suspects Named

While the Senate documents mentioned no names, Italian newspapers identified the three main suspects as President Giovanni Leone, Mr. Moro and Mariano Rumor, now the Foreign Minister. All three denied the allegations.

"The party just could not decide to go into elections directly with all that hanging over its head," said one Christian Democrat today. "We hope things calm down soon on the Lockheed business."

The immediate political crisis arose from a parliamentary fight over abortion reform and quickly developed into a struggle over economic policy and relations between the Christian Democrats and the Communist Party, Italy's second largest. In the abortion issue, the Socialists, who argued for a liberal bill bordering on abortion on demand, threatened to bring down the present minority government after it pushed through a provision limiting abortion only to cases of rape or endangered health.

Since then the Socialists have said the only way out would be an election this June. But there is still an outside chance that they will change their minds—it would not be the first time—and the Moro Administration would scrape by.

Most politicians, however, now believe that elections are inevitable and that the Socialists are determined to drop their past agreement to abstain on crucial votes and topple Mr. Moro by voting against him. The vote of confidence next week will be on a government program dealing with the present economic troubles, which have included a dramatic drop in the value of the lira.

PERU MAKING PAPER FROM SUGAR CANE

TRUJILLO, Peru, April 24 (Reuters)—Peruvians will be turning newspaper pages made from sugar cane next year when a newsprint plant near here begins production.

It will be the world's first industrial plant to manufacture newspaper from bagasse, a flaky material made from the crushed husks of sugar cane, the State Industry Board says.

The plant, at Santiago de Cao, 300 miles north of Lima, will roll out 110,000 tons of newsprint a year, cutting out an annual import bill of $30 million for wood pulp.

The State Industry Board said it was building the plant, at a cost of $80 million, with aid from Canada, Mexico and Finland because the high price of wood pulp paper has made thethe bagasse project economically viable.

Until increases in the price of petroleum and other materials essential for paper production sent the cost of newsprint soaring, bagasse was little more than a discarded by-product of the sugar-refining process.

Refineries used the cane waste product as a cheap source of fuel. Recently mills on Peru's large sugar cooperatives here have been turning it into cardboard and wrapping paper.

"More fun for summer"

that's Carol Horn's fashion slogan

It was a 90-degree blinger
the day we called Carol,
but you never would have guessed it from her voice. The young designer sounded bright as an off-shore breeze.

"Guess what I'm wearing right this minute? The very pants you're putting in Sunday's ad!"
We were glad.

"And they feel so nice and cool!"
We were envious.

"Let's not talk about fashion philosophy today.
Summer is for good times.
should just be fun."
We were relieved.

Because looking at these sketches had us
dreaming of beaches, bikes and how great
these bright tones
will be with a tan.

"You're right.
They're happy colors."
said Carol, who in spite of her I-don't-care air, is smart (and serious)
Coty Award winner.

The shades are cherry red, grassy green, and white. And after all the neutral-naturals
we've wintered in,
they're as refreshing
as lemonade in the shade.

Now let's study the planks in Ms Horn's fashion platform.
The pull-on pants she was wearing herself are new and slim.
"There are so many things you can do with them"
she said. "You can roll 'em up; you can push them up;
or you can let them down."
Sizes 4 to 12 in cherry or white at 30.00.

The slightly shaped tunic is green or cherry with icy white cuffs and placket. S.m. and l. 39.00.

Carol's culottes in cherry or green are new, too.
They wrap on like a baby's diaper and flare out in back. Just for fun. 4 to 12. 32.00.

Everything here by Carol Horn for Habitat is pure,
cool cotton except the multi-striped tube top.
That's skinny knitted in airy cotton

You see? Even the prices aren't very serious. Come let your good times

INDUSTRY CHANGES SAUDI LANDSCAPE

Fishing Havens in Northeast Give Way to Factories and Plant for Steel Pipes

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times

RAS TANURA, Saudi Arabia —Self-propelled cranes rumbled over the sand, hammers clanged on huge new natural-gas tanks, and Abdullah Kadhim gave a slightly dazed smile.

"It's going to be a madhouse around here, I tell you," he said. "Things are going to be different for everybody."

The New York Times/April 25, 1976
The Ras Tanura area is changing rapidly.

pipe plant, are going to be built along the Persian Gulf coast of northeastern Saudi Arabia where tribesmen once fished before the oilmen came.

Industrial training, advanced technical education and schooling for girls are being stepped up here in an area whose inhabitants were once known largely for their skill in tending date palms.

A huge military cantonment that will cost more than $1 billion is to rise near the Kuwaiti border. Improvements are being made, or will be made, in such sleepy fishing ports as Oqair, Darain, Bira and Zamama in addition to major naval and civilian port construction projects at Damman, Jubail and elsewhere.

The development the northeastern region has enjoyed has been largely carried out by the Arabian American Oil Company, now controlled by the Saudi Government, in the course of exploiting the area's oil fields.

The lack of good natural ports has been a constraint on economic growth here, but the Saudi Government wants to spur the industrial development of the region along with the development of the Red Sea coast, which is where the kingdom's commercial life is centered.

There is, however, widespread anxiety in the northeast about the disruptions that may be caused by all this innovation, much of which is spelled out in the kingdom's current five-year plan.

Already the area's hotels are so crowded with visiting businessmen that some are said to charge travelers $17 to spend a night on their roofs. And there are fears that it will be difficult to feed the tens of thousands of foreign workers who are to arrive as construction gathers momentum in the next few years. In some places the price of fish and chicken has risen ominously.

But this sandy littoral, fringed with shoals and reefs, has known shocks before. In 1913, Abdel Aziz al-Saud—widely known as Ibn Saud—the father of Saudi Arabia's present monarch, King Khaled, passed the last Turks out of the towns of Hasa and Qatif. In the 1930's, oil was discovered in the region, and American oilmen and their families thronged ashore. They put up wooden bungalows 50 miles south of here on the dusty slope of a hill called Dhahran. Dhahran has since then become the headquarters for the huge Arabian American Oil Company. The company accounts for almost all of Saudi Arabia's oil production, which is bringing in more than $25 billion a year.

Over the decades Aramco (the company is known, as turned Ras Tanura, once a fishing settlement, into a huge oil-export terminal. It is also the site of one of the world's largest crude-oil refineries, with a capacity of more than 500,000 barrels a day. Now the Saudi government has assigned Aramco to oversee the construction of roughly $10 billion worth of piping and plants to gather the gas from the oilfields—which in the past has generally been burned off—and process it for export and for use here.

Preliminary engineering work has been done, millions of dollars worth of material has been delivered and construction camps are being built for foreign workers who are to be brought in by contracting firms.

To man the new gas facilities scheduled for the end of 1979, Aramco has two thousand Saudi employees—out of a total payroll of 19,500 persons—now being given specialized training.

Further thousands of Saudis and foreigners are expected to get jobs at the projected industrial plants, centered on Jubail and Dammam, which are to include aluminum as well as steel-making installations.

Boris Lures Tourists to Land of Yaks and Yetis

By WILLIAM BORDERS
Special to The New York Times

KATMANDU, Nepal—Boris Lissanevitch, a colorful restaurateur and party-giver who brought borscht to Katmandu, is building a new hotel, to the delight of the mountaineers, diplomats and Nepalese officials who have made him a local legend.

A Ukrainian émigré who has been here for 25 years, Mr. Lissanevitch—everyone calls him Boris—is regarded as the inspiration of the burgeoning tourist industry in this remote Himalayan kingdom, which was all but forbidden to outsiders until the mid-1950's.

It was Mr. Lissanevitch, a former ballet dancer and hunter, who persuaded the King of Nepal to begin granting visas to foreigners who just wanted to come have a look at the world's highest mountains.

"The King said he could understand a tourist wanting to visit someplace interesting, like, say the marketplace in Calcutta, but he couldn't see why they'd want to come to a place with nothing but mountains and forests," Mr. Lissanevitch recalled, his big eyes smiling over a Campari and soda in his apartment atop an ornate 90-year-old palace here.

With overseas visitors now totaling 75,000 a year, tourism has become the country's largest source of foreign exchange, the hotels are crowded with groups from West Germany, Japan, France and the United States, and Mr. Lissanevitch is very pleased.

His first hotel here was the Royal, in a crumbling 19th-century palace, which soon became a regular stop for visitors, including climbers on their way to Everest, which is 100 miles east of here. After centuries of isolation, Nepal was new to world travel, and its Government frequently came to Mr. Lissanevitch's Royal with their entertainment problems.

When Queen Elizabeth paid a call in 1961, he flew in caviar from the Caspian Sea, and lined up 376 elephants to salute her with their trunks.

When the President of Israel came a few years later, Mr. Lissanevitch got a rabbi from Calcutta to supervise the slaughter of the chickens, and brought in enough extra plates and dishes to make his kitchen kosher.

But the hotel had problems. For example, there were 140 rooms and only two bathrooms. He finally closed it a few years ago, moving its restaurant, the Yak and Yeti, to another stately old brick palace, on the grounds of which the new hotel is now going up.

The menu at the Yak and Yeti includes neither yak, the shaggy ox that roams the Himalayas, nor Yeti, the so-called Abominable Snowman, which some people here take very seriously. But its Russian fare, prepared from Mr. Lissanevitch's 100-year-old family recipes, has made it one of the most talked about restaurants among travelers in south Asia.

He was still a teen-ager when the Communists took over Odessa, his home town. As a cover, his aunt, who happened to be ballet mistress of the Odessa opera house, enrolled him in its troupe. To his surprise, he enjoyed it, and even toured Europe for several years afterward with Diaghilev's Ballet Russe.

In 1936, he moved to Calcutta and opened The Three Hundred, a very stylish men's club. It was there, a few years later, that he met King Tribhuvan of Nepal, grandfather of the present King, and was persuaded to come here.

His new Yak and Yeti is among several projects that will add 400 first-class hotel rooms to Katmandu over the next few years. After it opens this winter, will he think about retiring, now that he is 70 years old?

"My God, no! You retire in the grave. I have other ideas to think about. For example, if I could build an underwater restaurant in the Seychelles Islands, why, think of the view."

Catholic Schools Are Regaining Strength With Emphasis on Spiritual Val

ing of the National Catholic Educational Association.

"We are very much on the upswing," said the Rev. John F. Meyers, president of the association. "Morale is high and this convention symbolizes it. It's no longer a question of whether we are going to be able to save the schools, but what we are going to do to improve them."

The efforts by Catholic schools to infuse the education they offer with a moral dimension at a time when many of society's traditional values are being shaken is seen as a key to enhancing the appeal of the schools.

Furthermore, while the public schools are suffering a loss of confidence, the Catholic schools find themselves being looked upon favorably by many parents for maintaining an atmosphere in which youngsters and teachers feel safe and the schools remain orderly.

"It's not that we do anything all that different in discipline," said the Rev. Michael O'Neill, the former superintendent of the Catholic schools in Spokane, Wash. "It's just that the parents have their kids there voluntarily," he said, adding that were not about to cause difficulty "by tearing apart the school."

Change in Quality

There is also a belief that Catholic schools, once viewed as academically inferior to public schools, have pulled even in quality and, in some cities, even surpassed public schools.

As Catholic educators reassess their position and take note of the waiting lists that have developed for admission to some of their schools, particularly at the secondary level, sentiment is growing for lifting the moratoriums on school construction that were imposed for many dioceses during the days of disastrous decline.

On the other hand, though this year's enrollment decline of 2.6 percent is the smallest since the 1960's, some Catholics are concerned that they must be careful about expansion because of the effects of the drop in the Country's birth rate.

One of the most notable changes in the thinking of Catholic educators appears to be their shift away from a preoccupation with obtaining public funds for their schools, though funding itself remains a major problem.

"After having put a lot of time and effort into trying to get Federal aid," said the Rev. John R. Gilbert of Bloomington, Minn., chairman of the association's elementary school executive committee, "we have seen many court decisions go against us, and we have become realistic. That idea has now been put on the back burner."

The attempt to promote and justify Catholic schools on the basis of their teaching of values is a result of the revised outlook.

"People today are looking for values-oriented schools," said Sister Joseph Marie, a diocesan educational consultant in Dubuque, Iowa. "We have always had this difference, but we didn't use to emphasize it; we apologized for it."

Brother Thomas P. Draney of New York, in a speech entitled, "Time to Tell It Like It Is," told his fellow Catholic educators that in contrast to the Catholic schools, the public schools were teaching "the religion known as secular humanism—the religion recognized by the Supreme Court."

Encouraged by Book

Some of the encouragement that Catholic educators feel today is attributable to a recent book, "Catholic Schools In A Declining Church," by Father Andrew M. Greeley, Dr. William C. McCready and Dr. Kathleen McCourt.

The book, based on research by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, asserts that 90 percent of the country's Catholics support parochial schools and most want to help keep them open.

It is the author's contention that a 1968 papal encyclical reaffirming official condemnation of birth control offended many American Catholics and that the schools suffered from the resulting decline in devotion and waning of financial commitment to the church.

Dr. McCready, a sociologist, suggested at the meeting that a step toward revitalizing Catholic schools would be for the church hierarchy to withdraw from operating the schools and turn over financial and educational decision-making to local laymen and clergy.

Laymen already have become predominant on the teaching faculties, accounting for 63.1 percent of the 149,760 teachers in the nation's 9,993 elementary and se schools.

COLUMBIA TO DROP CAMPUS PROJECT

Says It Cannot Now Afford Community Program

In a move that has stirred angry protests from local residents and political leaders, Columbia University has announced that it cannot afford to provide $350,000 next year to finance a popular educational program.

The project is the Community Educational Exchange Program, which offers high school-equivalency and college-preparatory training to more than 1,000 students ranging in age from 14 to 60. It has been operating on Columbia's campus since 1970, but unless some new source of funds is found, the program will have to shut down on June 30.

"It would be an abysmal loss to the community if this program were annihilated, and I use that word because Columbia is trying to destroy the program," said the project's director, Leon Hawkins. Most of the students enrolled are from Harlem, Morningside Heights and the Upper West Side, although there is some representation from elsewhere in the city.

Charging that the university president, William J. McGill, had reneged on a commitment he had made to maintain the program for another year, Mr. Hawkins and other project staff members, students and supporters held demonstrations on Columbia's campus on Thursday and Friday and vowed to continue hounding Dr. McGill as part of their protest.

At a news conference Thursday, State Senator Carl H. McCall and City Councilman Frederick E. Samuel, both Manhattan Democrats, and the Rev. Paul Moore, the Episcopal bishop, pledged their support for the effort to save the educational program and denounced Columbia for what they called its insensitivity to minority and community interests.

In a statement, Dr. McGill said that Columbia's budget problems "require drastic curtailment of our expenditures and complete concentration on Columbia's central academic mission."

"It is regrettable, but I have no choice," he added.

The educational program was originally financed by Columbia's Urban Center, an administrative unit created by the university to allocate $10 million it received from the Ford Foundation to begin new urban research and community service programs.

From 1973, when the last of the center's unrestricted funds ran out, to 1975, the program subsisted on approximately $350,000 per year it received from the university's general income budget.

Last June, Columbia liquidated a previously restricted endowment of $750,000, the only funds remaining from the center, and used that to cover the educational program's budget from the previous year, 1974-75, meaning that the 1975-76 year would exhaust the funds.

Youth, 17, Awarded A TV for His Poster By Humane Society

Herman Rodriguez, 17 years old, was awarded first prize in the second annual poster campaign for Be Kind to Animals Week for his depiction of cats lounging amidst over flowing garbage cans in a graffiti-covered allay.

His poster in the contest sponsored by the Humane Society of New York carried the caption, "Give us a break."

"That's the way I see them," he said. "The alleyway is their environment. Why not draw their reality?" Young Rodriguez, a resident of St. Vincent's Home for Boys in Brooklyn, won a color television set for his poster.

More than 500 posters were on display at the Greenwich Savings Bank at 57th Street and Third Avenue, including one showing a boa constrictor wrapped around a tree over the caption, "Be Kind to Animals, No Matter How Strange They Are."

Mayor Beame, who was on hand to give out the awards, praised the efforts of the more than 1,000 Ned York City public school students who participated in the campaign. "The Humane Society couldn't do it alone," he said. "It needs the help of pet owners and the public in general."

The Humane Society plans to display the posters in large department stores and in the main branch of the Public Library on Fifth Avenue during Be Kind to Animals Week, which begins May 2.

One of the 106 prizes awarded was given to a small orange kitten, called "First Kitty of the City." The Mayor said he would give it to his grandchildren.

for 2 weeks only we've reduced one of our finest imported India wool rugs

This magnificent Indo-Savonnerie design derives from the French periods of Louis XIV and XV, and its rich jewel tones and delicate floral design will enrich any traditional room today. Handmade of a fine blend of durable native wools, carefully woven right through to the back, its thick nap and heavy pile give it a velvety texture that enhances the intricate border and center medallion with lovely sculptured flowers. Choose dark blue with rust, or rust on creamy ivory accented in blue. Not all colors in all sizes. Sale ends May 8th.

A Study of Comets Indicates That Sixty Had Common Origin

WASHINGTON, April 24 (AP) —The orbits of 60 comets indicate they originated from the explosion of a giant planet that once existed between Mars and Jupiter, according to Dr. Thomas C. Van Flandern of the United States Naval Observatory here.

The astronomer said in an interview this week that computer plotting of the comet orbits seemed to confirm the long-held theory that the giant planet existed up to about six million years ago.

"At that time, the planet exploded—accounting for most, if not all comets, the asteroid belt and many meteorites," Dr. Van Flandern said.

What could have caused such an explosion is unknown.

The astronomer traced backward the orbits of 60 comets that have been seen only once from earth. These comets have orbits so large that it takes millions of years for one swing around the sun.

"There is a tendency for these orbits to intersect at a common starting point in the asteroid belt between Mars and Jupiter," Dr. Van Flandern said. The asteroid belt is a ring of rocky bodies orbiting the sun.

Three quarters of the orbits indicate the comets originated in that area five million to seven million years ago in a zone about 100 million miles wide, he said.

The orbits do not intersect exactly at one spot, he said, because the comets probably were disturbed by the gravitational influences of the galaxy and passing stars.

Dr. Van Flandern says his findings, drawn from a year of calculations, are in line with a theory proposed in 1972 by M. W. Overden, an astronomer at the University of British Columbia.

An Intended Bridegroom Is Killed After Party

MANORVILLE, L. I., April 24 (AP)—A bridegroom-to-be and three close friends were killed today when their car struck a tree in this Suffolk County community as they drove home from a bachelor party. Two other passengers in the car were hospitalized with serious injuries.

The intended bridegroom was Joseph Horne, 20 years old, of Moriches. He was to have been married to Theresa Workowski of Center Moriches in the afternoon.

Also dead were William T. Wedell, 21, of Center Moriches, the owner and operator of the auto; Edward S. Metski, 15, of Center Moriches, and a man identified by a survivor as Lance Bunn, with no further identification immediately available.

Racial Violence Shuts Schools in Arkansas Town

EUDORA, Ark., April 24 (UPI) —All Eudora public schools have been closed for the rest of the school year in a move to halt racial violence and to prevent a mass white exodus from the predominantly black system.

"The atmosphere is getting tense here," said Avery Turner, one of two black members on the Eudora school board. "We have a problem we can hardly deal with. We believe it is in the best interest to cool tempers down for awhile."

The school board voted unanimously late last night to close all public schools because of threats of further violence, uncertainty of adequate staffing and the threatened withdrawal of students from school.

Before voting to close the schools, the board had thought that classes could reopen Monday under the protection of the National Guard.

Stone-throwing and fist fights between about 70 black and 30 white students broke out Wednesday at the 75 per cent black Eudora High School. This followed a racial fight earlier in the week. As a result, city officials declared a sundown curfew, requested that state troopers be sent to the Mississippi River border town of 3,687, and ordered the schools closed.

The Eudora schools were fully integrated in 1970. School officials said there had been past instances of racial fights but nothing of the magnitude of disturbances this week.

"You can't just say this is a school problem," Mr. Turner said. "The trouble started in the community and ended up in school. When it got there, we had to deal with it."

What is causing the fighting between white and black students, if there is anything specific, is not known, school officials say.

MEMO SAYS F.B.I. GOT MISSING FILES

Bureau Says It Was Given Papers Socialist Asserts Were Stolen in '68

By JOHN M. CREWDSON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 24—The contents of a briefcase allegedly stolen from the 1968 Presidential candidate of the Socialist Workers Party mysteriously turned up a month later in the hands of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, according to F.B.I. documents provided by the bureau to the candidate, Fred W. Halstead.

Mr. Halstead recalled in a telephone interview from his home in Los Angeles yesterday that the briefcase, containing personal and political papers, was taken from a car in San Francisco in early October 1968, about a month before the Presidential election in which he got 41,399 votes in 19 states.

A previously secret F.B.I. memorandum prepared by the bureau's Sacramento, Calif., field office and made available to Mr. Halstead shows, that the contents of his briefcase were forwarded to F.B.I. headquarters by the Sacramento agents the following December.

Bureau's Report

According to the F.B.I. memorandum, the papers were obtained by the bureau from an unidentified individual who reportedly said he found the briefcase in a lavatory at the San Francisco International Airport on October 23, 1968, nearly a month after it was allegedly stolen from Mr. Halstead's car.

The purported finder, the F.B.I. report continued, "was unable to locate the owner of the briefcase" and took it to his home in nearby Vallejo, Calif., where "he decided to destroy it and the contents."

But the memorandum said the finder telephoned F.B.I. agents in Sacramento, who persuaded him to surrender the materials to them.

Mr. Halstead said yesterday that he could not account for the discrepancies between the F.B.I. report and his own recollections of how and when he lost his briefcase, except to assume that the F.B.I. had taken the item from the car and then made up a "finder" as part of a cover story.

The bureau has customarily disguised in writing the sources of some of its more sensitive information, such as attributing to a "reliable confidential informant" the results of wiretaps or burglaries carried out by its agents.

Mr. Halstead's Recollection

Mr. Halstead said that the briefcase and a coat had been stolen from the automobile owned by Paul Colvin, a San Francisco antiwar activist, while it was parked in front of a San Francisco church that housed a Vietnam peace organization.

Mr. Halstead's campaign itinerary shows that his visit to San Francisco occurred on Oct. 2 and 3, 1968, well before Oct. 28, given in the F.B.I. report as the date of the discovery of the briefcase in the San Francisco airport.

Mr. Halstead said he had "just assumed that it was a regular burglary" and thought nothing more about it until recently, when the F.B.I. document was provided to him in connection with a request to the bureau under the Freedom of Information Act.

He said that the stolen materials had never been returned, nor had the F.B.I. notified him that it had his property. He said he now planned "to ask for it back."

Although the Socialist Workers Party has obtained a court order under which all F.B.I. documents relating to the party are to be surrendered to its lawyers, the 600 pages of F.B.I. files recently sent to Mr. Halstead have not been made available to the party under the suit.

Leonard B. Boudin, the party's lawyer, noted in a letter sent last week to the Justice Department that under California law the crime of theft occurred when the finder of lost property kept it or passed it on to another rather than returning it to the owner.

Mr. Halstead said his briefcase was clearly marked with his name, as was also indicated by the F.B.I. memorandum's reference to him as the owner of the materials inside.

A Federal statute also makes it a misdemeanor for any Federal employee to use his authority "for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the nomination or the election of any candidate for the office of President."

The F.B.I. has admitted that it burglarized the offices of the Socialist Workers Party in New York City on an average of once every three weeks between 1960 and 1966, the year it said all burglaries directed at the party were halted.

An Endorsement for Reagan

WASHINGTON, April 24 (UPI)—The chairman of the National Young Republicans, Jack Mueller, endorsed Ronald Reagan for the Presidential nomination. He said that President Ford had "presided over the precipitous downfall of America's military strength" and that Mr. Reagan "offered the only hope for a Republican victory in November."

Stein Asserts Medicaid Co-ops Could Save State $700 Million

By DAVID BIRD

Assemblyman Andrew Stein proposed yesterday the setting up of a series of medicaid health cooperatives in New York State that he said would "save $700 million a year while providing superior medical care for the poor."

The Manhattan Democrat, who is running for his party's United States Senate nomination, said that after two years of studying the Medicaid system, which pays bills for the poor in facilities ranging from nursing homes to doctor's offices, he found that the problem was deeper than just a few fraudulent practitioners.

"We in New York must strive to do more than merely refund Medicaid; we must reform it," Mr. Stein said in a statement.

Advisory Council

Under the Stein plan, each Medicaid patient would be required to be treated at a special health cooperative that would be run by a state-appointed administrator who would be required to consult with an advisory council made up of an equal number of physician and patient representatives.

Under the present system, a Medicaid patient is free to see any physician who agrees to treat him. This system, Mr. Stein said, has come to the point where "in New York State we spend an average of $1,129 for each Medicaid recipient per year."

"Nearly one third of this is wasted through overutilization, mismanagement, fraud or faulty design of the system," he added.

Private medical groups now operating here, Mr. Stein said, can provide complete medical treatment for patients at a rate of about $400 a year.

Under the Stein plan, the health cooperatives to be set up would be paid $750 a year for each Medicaid patient (to allow for the greater medical problems in the poor population) and doctors would be paid an annual salary so there would be no encouragement to provide excessive services such as under the present fee-for-service payment basis.

Critics charge that the fee-for-service payments have spawned such evils as Medicaid "mills" where each Medicaid patient is given a wide variety of services, which are billed to the government, even when he comes in with a relatively simple complaint.

"I would agree that something along this line is necessary," Dr. Lowell E. Bellin, the city's Health Commissioner, said when the Stein plan was described to him.

But Dr. Bellin said the proposal could be expected to run into strong opposition because of the freedom-of-choice provisions in the Medicaid law.

"Freedom of choice is the major obstacle," Dr. Bellin said. "Get rid of that and it opens up all sorts of possibilities."

Dr. Bellin said the idea that freedom of choice would give the poor the same opportunities to choose their physicians as anyone else was a myth because many doctors would not accept Medicaid patients because of the low fees and red tape involved.

EXTENDED STRIKE IN RUBBER IS SEEN

A Cost-of-Living Clause Is Major Point in Dispute

Special to The New York Times

CLEVELAND, April 23—All signs in the nationwide rubber strike point to a long walkout over basic economic issues.

With talks recessed over the weekend, 47 plants in 21 states, representing two-thirds of the nation's tire-making capacity, remained shut down by the United Rubber Workers, which is seeking a large money package from the Big Four rubber companies.

Officially the parties say that the strike, which began Wednesday, could be settled at any time, but unofficially they concede that prospects for an early solution are dim.

The union says it will not settle until it gets a contract comparable to the one the United Automobile Workers have. The Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, which is negotiating for the industry, says the package it has already offered is worth $40 million over three years and "that's a lot of money."

The negotiations are being closely watched by manufacturing industries throughout the country. They expect the rubber workers to set a pattern for wage increases for the nation this year. Even though the rubber workers are trying to catch up for gains they did not make during the last three years, it will be difficult to tell other workers who already have more that they cannot get what the rubber workers eventually settle for.

Still unheard from are the nation's auto makers, whose own recovery may be set back if the walkout goes on more than a few weeks, depleting tire stocks and interfering with car production.

The Big Four rubber companies — Firestone, Goodyear Tire and Rubber, B. F. Goodrich and Uniroyal Inc., supply more than 85 percent of the new tires used by Detroit, and the union says it expects the strike to end when the car makers tell the tire makers to settle up.

But a spokesman for General Motors said in Detroit, "I don't think we can exert any influence on any of our suppliers. It's ridiculous to think we can dictate when they're going to settle their strike."

So far, the rubber companies have been adamant in refusing to meet the union's demand for a cost-of-living clause like the one the auto workers have.

In addition to contractual wage increases, the auto workers get 3.3 cents an hour added to their pay for each one-point increase in the consumer price index. That formula netted them $1.05 an hour during their present three-year contract, which will expire in September.

The rubber workers, who have traditionally matched the auto workers' pay, have no cost-of-living clause in their expired contract, which was negotiated in 1973 during Phase Three wage stabilization controls. The cost-of-living clause that has been offered them so far would net them 2.5 cents an hour for each one-point increase in the consumer price index only after the increase had already gone up more than 3.5 percent in any contract year.

Peter Bommarito, president of the striking union, said that under that proposal the 70,000 workers now on strike would lose 90 cents an hour in purchasing power in the next two years.

A Firestone executive defended the company's proposal by noting that the wage increase offered to the rubber workers would make up for what they would not get in cost of living. The company has proposed 60 cents an hour the first year, 30 cents the second year and 25 cents the third year. Rubber workers have been averaging $5.50 an hour.

But the union says that the $1.15 an hour wage proposal is not enough to make up for the $1.65 an hour gap that already exists between rubber workers' pay and auto workers' pay. "What they don't understand is that we're already three years behind," said one union aide.

Of course, either side may suddenly shift gears and give in, but at this point the management is unwilling to and the union is unable to. Unions are political entities, and having gotten its members ready for a strike and taken them out, the United Rubber workers leadership can not now suddenly take them back in without more to show for it.

Firestone fully understands that. "No industrial relations person can ignore the political needs of a union president," said a Firestone industrial relations person. But he denied that the company had a good offer hidden away to put on the table when it felt that the union could buy it.

Union Seeks World Backing

CLEVELAND, April 24 (UPI) —Mr. Bommarito is preparing to leave tomorrow for Geneva, where he will meet with European labor leaders. A spokesman said the union president would seek "worldwide solidarity action among world rubber councils of the International Federation of Chemical and General Workers' Unions" on the strike.

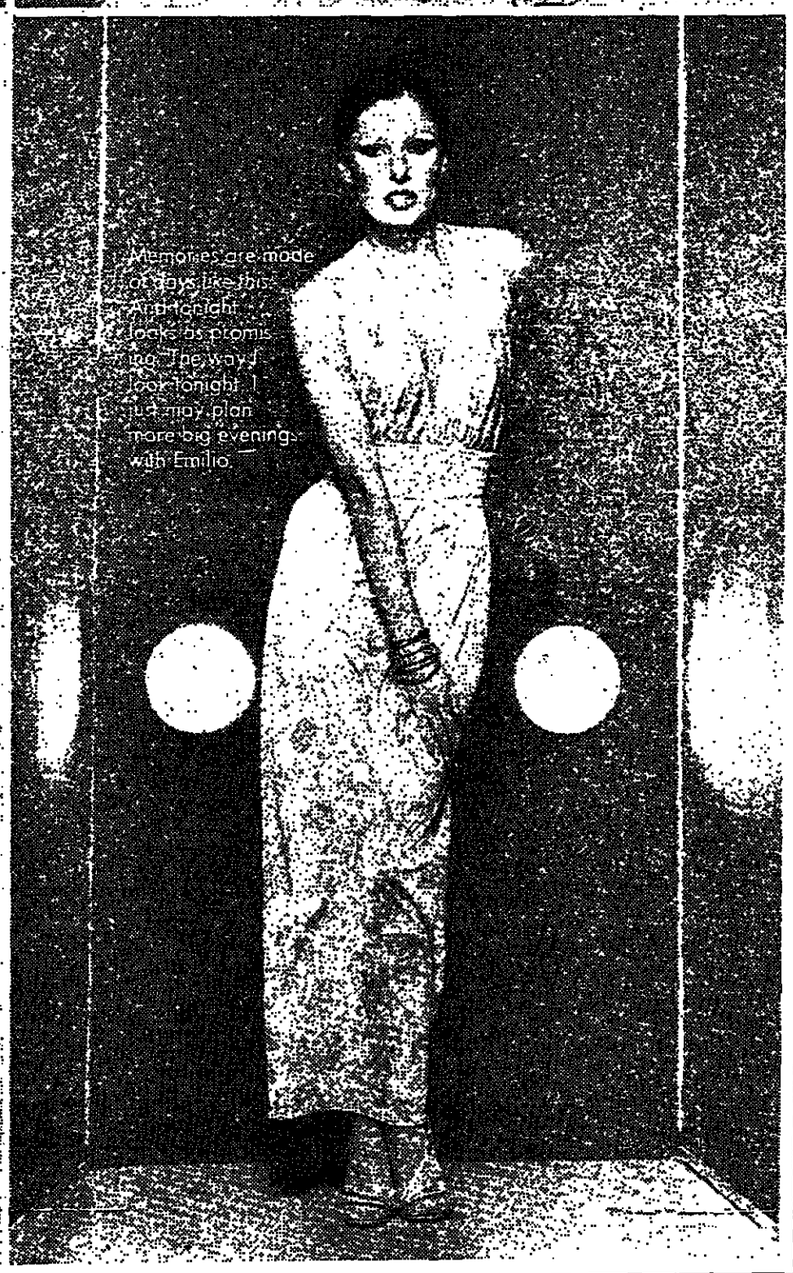
Blue skies. Our own private court. And my Pucci tennis set to help me score. Am I in heaven? Almost.

The pro thinks my golf form is perfect. But I suspect it's the way I use Emilio's sports equipment. Wearing his vest and culottes over nothing but bare tanned skin.

My today just keeps getting more glorious. To celebrate it all, I've slipped into another Pucci. It's a fabulous day dress. Fitted, then eased into softness.



Memories are made of days like this. And tonight looks as promising. The way I look tonight. I just may plan more big evenings with Emilio.

Tuesday, April 27, Pucci will be at S.F.A. from 2:00 to 4:00 p.m. with so many new things to see. Bright geometrics and dainty flowers. Separates, pajamas, dresses long and short. Soft things so easy to wear. Sport things so easy to play in. Jerseys, chiffons, cotton. To live in and adore, by day and by night. Upper left: Periwinkle and white cotton and nylon jersey tennis dress, matching panties, $80. Matching head band, $12.

All, 6 to 14 sizes. Ours exclusively, in the Pucci Boutique, Fifth Floor. Sorry, no mail or phone orders.

Levitt Says State Overpaid City $8.4 Million for Health Projects

By WOLFGANG SAXON

Auditors for Arthur Levitt, the State Comptroller, reported yesterday that the city's Department of Health owed the state $8.4 million for excess reimbursements made from July 1, 1969, to June 30, 1974.

The state audit covered the department's public health programs during those five years, which included community health, maternal and child health, preventive diseases, environmental sanitation and related health services.

The state, which assumed up to 50 percent of the cost of such programs, reimbursed the Health Department a total of $132 million, the auditors said. Of that sum, they disallowed $8,429,995 and advised the State Department of health to confer with city officials on recovering the overpayments.

The Levitt audit said that the bulk of the improper claims involved prison health services, a "nonreimbursable activity" at the time. It reported that the auditors had identified those claims through a detailed check of the broad categories for which the city department had sought its share of aid from the state.

Unreported Revenues Cited

In addition, the report said, the department failed to offset claimed costs by using $379,000 in unreported revenues, which came chiefly from court fines paid by Health-Code violators.

Mr. Levitt also said that the city had not acted on a previous recommendation that it impose fees for certain laboratory services. He urged that this be done now, in view of the city's fiscal straits.

According to Mr. Levitt, the fact that the department's prison health services were not eligible for state reimbursement at the time had been pointed out in an earlier audit. He said that city officials, when questioned about this, had replied that they "had always considered these expenditures eligible", since such programs mainly involved traditional public-health work.

Mr. Levitt ruled that the prison-related costs had to be disallowed unless the Health Department resubmitted its claims for them with proof that they metthe legal requirements.

The state audit also noted that New York City would benefit from an amendment to the law, which now permits the city to receive state aid for providing medical services in jails through the city's Health Department. The amendment became effective in July 1974—after the five fiscal years covered by the report.

Expanded Services for Aged Planned in Washington

OLYMPIA, Wash., April 24 (AP)—Because of a $7.5 million experiment, about 100,000 elderly persons will soon be getting free legal advice, counseling on death and hot meals delivered to their homes.

These are just a few of the special services the State Office of Aging will offer starting this fall in a program aimed at keeping the elderly healthy and relatively self-sufficient.

Gov. Daniel J. Evans, an early supporter of the idea, signed legislation this week creating the program and appropriating $1.9 million in state tax funds. Sponsors say the Federal Government, which hopes to use the experiment as a national test case, will provide $5.6 million.

Heroin Crackdown May Not Cut Crime

By HAROLD M. SCHMECK Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 24—The "conventional wisdom" that law enforcement efforts to interrupt drug traffic tends to reduce heroin-related crime may be incorrect, the Drug Abuse Council said in a report released this week.

When the price of heroin rose in one major American city, robberies, burglaries and related "revenue-producing crimes" also rose, according to the study.

The study, covering Detroit in a 40-month period in the early 1970's, gave evidence that heroin users who supported their habit through crime made extra efforts to get money when a drug shortage drove the price up.

The council, a private foundation concerned with research and public policy evaluation on matters of drug abuse, said that some communities have had marginal success in reducing heroin supplies for a short time. But that none have had the kind of sweeping success that would eliminate use of the drug and its related crime.

Conventional Patterns

A staff member of the council said the study also showed that heroin users behave toward price fluctuations much as consumers behave toward more conventional products. That is, they may use a little less, but do not drop out of the market altogether.

Although the findings apply to only one American city that is not necessarily typical, the council said they do suggest policy questions for any community with a drug problem. The council publication listed seven possible policy alternatives ranging from continued efforts to reduce the heroin traffic to establishment of medical clinics for heroin maintenance of addicts. The council expressed no clear preference among the alternatives amd said all had some drawbacks.

The other alternatives are to adopt a policy a laissez-faire about heroin supply and availability, to focus on heroin-related offenses such as its importation, to employ "swift and certain punishment" for offenders who commit heroin-related crimes, to decriminalize possession and or sole of heroin and to expand heroin and to expand heroin treatment capacity.

In answer to a query, Peter B. Bensinger, administrator of the Justice Department's drug enforcement administration, said he disagreed with the conclusions of the study.

In fact, he said, when drug enforcement efforts achieved a sharp reduction in heroin supplies in the United States in 1972, national crime statistics showed a drop rather than a rise.

Based on agency figures on heroin price and level of purity, he estimated the drop in supply between 1971 and 1972 must have been about 20 to 25 percent. For the comparable period there was a drop of greater than 2-percent in the kinds of crime that would provide heroin users with money to buy the drug.

Mr. Bensinger also said the factors involved in heroin use were many and complex and that study based simply on price and crime rate was probably too narrowly focused.

The study was done for the council by the Public Research Institute, a division of the Center for Naval Analyses, an independent research organization.

"Our analysis shows that heroin price and the level of property crime are indeed related," said the institute's report, "a finding that lends support to the notion that addicts rely partly on property crime for money to buy drugs."

Special Election Slated Tuesday To Fill a Queens Assembly Seat

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

A Democratic district leader and a Republican-Conservative making his first race for office will be the contestants Tuesday in a special election to fill a State Assembly vacancy involving a seat from northwestern Queens.

The odds favor the Democrat because the 36th Assembly District, covering Astoria, Long Island City and a small piece of Woodside, is overwhelmingly Democratic.

Nonetheless, the Republican-Conservative, John F. Ramondino, said yesterday, "In a special election, anything can happen."

"We always have a candidate running every two years, and we weren't going to give way without a fight," added Mr. Ramondino, the 53-year-old owner of a Long Island City car-wash company.

A Leader Since 1970

His opponent, Denis J. Butler, a 48-year-old account executive with a broadcasting corporation, has ben a Deomocratic party district leader since 1970.

The election is being held becausethe district's Democratic Assemblyman, Anothony V. Gazzara, won a recent special election to fill a State Senate vacancy.

The winner in this week's Assembly contest will serve the remainder of the current legislative term, which runs until the end of the year. The seat at issue, like all the other state legislative seats, will be up for a full two-year term in next November's general election.

This week's contest will not affect the political dominance that Democrats now hold in the Assembly by virtue of their 87-to-62 majority. Republicans are in the majority in the Senate.

Mixed Feelings Expressed

Because of the short time left in the current legislative session, which is expected to adjourn in a few weeks, Mr. Ramondino has mixed feelings about the contest he is involved in. Without the special election on Tuesday, his district would remain unrepresented for the rest of the term, he notes.

At the same time, Mr. Ramondino said, the cost of the special contest for so short a term could be considered "unnecessary" in view of the fiscal problems faced by the city and state.

Mr. Butler said he considered the special election "very necessary," because of the important fiscal issues the state lawmakers have been deciding.

More Women Becoming Owners of Businesses

made 2,050 loans amounting to $102 million to women, up from 1,947 loans totaling $91 million the year before. And in the six months ending Dec. 21, 1975, there were 1,243 loans for $69 million made to women.

Examples of the expanding frontier are numerous.

In Detroit, the Feminist Economic Network Association opened a Feminist Women's City Club on April 9. Eight retail shops run by women have rented space in the building, along with a branch of the Feminist Federal Credit Union.

"It is the first step in establishing a stable feminist economy," said Joanne Parrent, head of the association, which paid $200,000 in cash for the six-story building and spent $50,000 more for repairs.

A New York Times spot check in a dozen major cities indicated that the typical female entrepreneur is either a sole proprietor of a business grossing less than $25,000 a year or heads a company with fewer than eight employees that grosses less than $100,000. Retail or service concerns are predominant.

Equal Opportunity Issue

Meanwhile, equal opportunity for women entrepreneurs has become a feminist issue, and the following developments have occurred:

¶There has been a spate of books on the subject, newsletters such as Artemis (a monthly "for enterprising women") and the April issue of MS magazine, which contains a 16-page insert on "How to start your own business."

¶A class action suit was filed last fall against the Small Business Administration by Madonna Loercher, owner of the Feminist Book Mart in New York. She alleged sex discrimination in the Small Business Administration's denial of a guarantee for a $10,000 business loan she sought from a bank.

¶A proposal aimed at interesting banks in establishing for women, under S.B.A. sponsorship, private investment companies to generate capital has gained support in a United States Senate panel on small business.

¶An "old-girl" network by which women entrepreneurs exchange information and refer business contacts to each other has sprung out of the Association of Women Business Owners, founded two years ago in Washington.

In some outstanding instances, women who started their own businesses ran them into multimillion-dollar companies —as Mary Wells Lawrence did in advertising, Estee Lauder in cosmetics and Florence Eiseman in children's clothes. But these women have not been considered feminist heroines, partly because they held themselves aloof from the cause, partly because some of them had husbands as their partners, but mostly because their successes were so exceptional.

A Hunt for Options

"Women today are looking for additional options," said William Zucker, professor of management at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. He is one of the directors of the Wharton Entrepreneurial Center, which does research on venture capitalism.

Professor Zucker was commenting on the 25 percent female composition of audiences for the seminars on "How To Successfully Start Your Own Business" that he and Professor Edward Shils have been taking on the road, so far to New York and Hartford.

Similarly, the second most popular workshop in the day-long women's finance seminar sponsored last month by Wharton and the Philadelphia National Bank was "Today's Woman as Entrepreneur."

Such attendance is regarded as a hopeful symptom, since many women blunder into business without realizing what tools they will need.

"We've seen some horrifying examples of lack of accounting and financial knowledge," said Madeline McWhinney, president of the First Women's Bank in New York, reporting on the increasing number of requests for business loans the bank is getting.

"Many of those loans are simply not bankable loans because what they are seeking is equity capital. They have to get started from their own sources and then we can help with working capital," Miss McWhinney said.

Raising Capital

This need to show a bank at least a kernel of investment before asking for a loan is something many persons going into small businesses, of either sex, do not realize, Miss McWhinney added.

Or if they do, they do not know how to go about raising this initial capital. Among the self-help groups springing up are the Association of Women Business Owners founded two years ago in Washington and already inundated, beyond the time and energy of its 135 members, with requests for starting nationwide chapters. A New York counterpart was formed last February, and next fall a conference will be held in Washington to plan a national convention of women business owners for 1977.

the Washington association was active in lobbying efforts of feminist groups before the passage of the Federal Equal Credit Opportunity Act last fall. They succeeded in having the same relaxation of restrictions on consumer credit for women extended to their applications for business loans.

The women business owners association also testified last February at a hearing of the Senate Select Committee on Small Business called by Senator Jacob K. Javits of New York to examine means by which women in business might be helped to overcome the unreasonable barriers they say are placed in their way.

Senator Javits is deliberating whether to convene another hearing next month, but in the meantime, one of his spokesman said, the Small Business Administration has been "responsive" in looking into the complaints leveled against it, namely that women are not represented in its advisory groups and corps of retired executives and that its staff treats women applicants for loans as second-class citizens.

Senator Javits would like to interest banks in setting up for women under S.B.A.-sponsorship private investment companies to generate capital. This has already been done for minorities.

Susan Hager, one of the founders of the Association of Business Women Owners and a partner with two other women in a public relations and fund-raising firm, said, however, that lack of access to money is not as crucial at the outset as it is later "when it makes a big difference as to whether you will grow."

"Most women want to start on a shoestring," she said. "They're afraid to take too big a risk. They don't want to borrow a lot of money. It's our psychological training."

She and her partners had a "cash flow problem" two and a half years after they started. It was caused by having to pay for services for a big conference they had landed (over competition from one of the nation's largest public relations firms) sooner than they were to be reimbursed. They obtained a $5,000 loan from the American Security and Trust Company.

"I was scared to death to ask for it," Mrs. Hager recalled. But when the loan officer asked for a co-signature to guarantee the loan, she persuaded him to re-examine their financial statement and reconsider. He did.

Source of Dismay

Requirements that women's loan applications be co-signed by their husbands, fathers or other males has been a source of dismay for feminists. They scored a victory when the Equal Credit Opportunity Act barred the typing of credit to marital status.

However, though a bank or other lender may not arbitrarily demand a co-signature from a spouse, it may ask for a guarantee from another party if it has reason to believe the loan is not adequately secured.

An analysis of the S.B.A.'s loans to women last year dovetails with the findings of Times correspondents that most women entrepreneurs go into retail or service businesses. A main attraction of a service business is that it requires little or no financial investment.

Guidelines-Atlanta, a tour service for the spouses of convention-goers, is run by telephone out of the homes of the two housewives who turned their years of volunteer experience as officers of a synagogue sisterhood into a business with annual revenues "in six figures."

Betty Ann Shusterman and Doris Koplin rejected the travel agency business, their first choice of possible ventures to generate money for their children's college tuitions, because they estimated it would have taken $50,000 capital to set up offices and meet bonding requirements.

They hire housewives as guides on a free-lance basis, and sell Guidelines-Atlanta to hotels and convention planners themselves.

Ellen Proxmire and the two friends who started a wedding-planning business in Washington in 1967 wanted to enlarge it into a retail bridal store but could not obtain the necessary loan without their husband's co-signatures. Mrs. Proxmire is the wife of Senator William Proxmire of Wisconsin.

So the women expanded into a convention tour service instead. Last year, they billed about $250,000 and took regular salaries for the first time. In 1974, according to Senator Proxmire's income tax return, Mrs. Proxmire's income from Washington Whirl-Around of D. C., Inc., was $4,000.

The subtle discrimination women complain of in business does not come only from banks. When Janet Markusic's husband died suddenly and she decided to run the gas station he owned in Columbus, Ohio, she had difficulty persuading the oil company to renew the dealership lease.

Oil company executives told her she should stay home with her five children. After her lawyer threatened to go to court and the local chapter of the National Organization for Women picketed the oil company's offices, the lease was renewed.

Toni Dewey, recently appointed corporate public relations director for Motorola, Inc., is the first woman to hold that job. Previously, she had been co-owner of a small advertising agency in Chicago. She thinks it helped her get the corporate post.

JACKSON FIGHTS A TWIN HANDICAP

He Finds Himself Dogged by Carter's Lead and View He Is Stand-in for Humphrey

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND
Special to The New York Times

PITTSBURGH, April 24—In the long campaign leading up to the Democratic Presidential primary on Tuesday, Senator Henry M. Jackson seems to have got trapped somewhere between Jimmy Carter's smile and Senator Hubert H. Humphrey's shadow.

Wherever he has turned in the last couple of weeks he has been asked whether he really thinks he can beat the confident Mr. Carter in this state's preferential contest. And even if he does defeat the former Georgia Governor, he is repeatedly asked, is he not just a stalking horse for the active noncandidacy of Senator Humphrey?

At times Mr. Jackson, the 63-year-old Senator from Washington with 35 years of experience on Capitol Hill, is obviously frustrated by it all.

"Look" he says over and over, "Hubert Humphrey is not a candidate and I'm not campaigning 18 or 20 hours a day to be a stalking horse for anybody."

Still They Ask

But it does not seem to do any good. The questions keep coming.

As for his chances of defeating Mr. Carter in the preferential voting, Senator Jackson has backed off from his earlier predictions that he would win handily. This week he started saying only that he would win more of the 134 delegates to be selected in separate contests than either Mr. Carter or his other major rival, Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona.

"The beauty contest will be very close," he now says of the preferential competition.

Mostly, these days, he has been declaring that "the name of the game is delegates." And by late in the week he was indicating to interviewers in Cleveland, where he stopped on a two-day swing through Kentucky, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio, that he would not be concerned even if he lost the "beauty contest" in Pennsylvania.

"Perhaps more will happen between June 8 [when the last primaries are held] and July 12 [when the Democratic National Convention begins] than happened through all the primaries," he said. The allusion was to the bargaining that is expected to take place if no candidate has an overwhelming delegate lead by then.

Most of this, however, runs counter to Senator Jackson's long-range strategy as he and his advisers mapped it out last year.

He had planned to make a major effort in Massachusetts and win, and he did. He had intended to sweep New York, and he made a strong showing there. The next big victory, which was supposed to convince everyone that Mr. Carter could not win in the major industrial states, was to have been in Pennsylvania. But now Senator Jackson and his advisers, despite protestations to the contrary, are worried.

Even when things have gone according to plan, they have not had the expected results.

Because Senator Jackson had predicted he would win a majority of the New York delegates, his victory, which fell somewhat short of that, gained little applause. On the other hand, Mr. Carter's poor finish in that state seems scarcely noted, partly because some of his delegate slates had been removed for irregularities and partly because he narrowly defeated Representative Udall in Wisconsin on the same day.

Mr. Carter continued to rise spectacularly in the national polls. Senator Jackson stayed close to the bottom.

The Jackson camp finally got a lift this week when organized labor formed committees in the Philadelphia and Pittsburgh areas to support the Senator.

But the move was late and the price was high.

Many, probably most, of the labor leaders are for Senator Humphrey and, despite their public statements are more interested in putting together strong union delegate slates and stopping Mr. Carter than they are in nominating Senator Jackson.

Reagan Wins Bulk of South Carolina's Delegates

Special to The New York Times

COLUMBIA, S.C. — South Carolina Republicans, meeting in their biennial state convention today, awarded most of their 36-member delegation to the Republican National Convention to Ronald Reagan.

South Carolina thus became the second state—North Carolina was the first—to choose delegates largely committed to Mr. Reagan over President Gerald Ford.

Of the 18 delegates chosen from South Carolina's six Congressional districts, 17 are for Reagan and one is uncommitted. Most of the at-large delegates also favored Mr. Reagan, but a time-consuming tabulation of votes cast by delegates to the state convention delayed an immediate result of that voting.

The delegates favoring Mr. Reagan sustained a mild setback when Gov. James B. Edwards, a strong supporter of the former California Governor, failed to push through a resolution to bind the entire delegation to a unit rule. In effect, this would have committed the entire 36-member delegation to Mr. Reagan. The motion was ruled out of order on a parliamentary technicality.

Delegates for President Ford took exception to the unit rule. They were particularly insensed over a caucus called by the Reagan forces last night in an attempt to insure Mr. Reagan of a unanimous commitment.

John Bourne, President Ford's campaign manager in South Carolina, said: "This should not be a winner-take-all situation. We are one big famly. I happen to be the big boy in my family, but I don't trample on everyone else in the family.

what will happen between now commit to one candidate naw is a little foolhardy, really."

In rebuttal, Mr. Edwards said: "I make no excuses for calling a caucus; this is a numbers game. I'm in politics for one thing, to straighten out the mess the country's in today—and we can do that with Mr. Reagan."

Former Gov. John B. Connally of Texas, the convention's keynote speaker, criticized the Democratic Congress in general and, Senator Frank Church, Democrat of Idaho, in particular.

'Most Irresponsible'

Mr. Connally called the present Congress "the most partisan and irresponsible in my lifetime."

Without mentioning Mr. Church by name, Mr. Connally decried the action of "a certain member of Congress from a Western state who has been acting like a junior G-man in such a way that he almost destroyed the counter-intelligence system of this country."

Mr. Church, now a Democratic candidate for President, was chairman of the special Senate committee that looked into alleged abuses by the nation's intelligence-gathering agencies.

Meanwhile, his campaign staff here was preparing to distribute more than 10,000 sample ballots identifying Mr. Carter's convention delegate candidates in the 50 state senatorial districts across the state.

President Ford is unopposed in the Republican Presidential primary.

Tick Segerbloom, Mr. Carter's deputy campaign manager for Pennsylvania, said that teams of lawyers would be dispatched as poll watchers in Philadelphia to prevent vote fraud and intimidation of Mr. Carter's supporters.

The Carter headquarters here in the city has reported several threatening telephone calls from unidentified persons who accuse the Georgian of advocating the current effort to recall Mayor Frank L. Rizzo of Philadelphia from office.

Statement by Udall

Representative Udall was also in Williamsport today for what his staff members there said was "purely a media event," a statement from the candidate on the blend of ecological responsibilitk and economic growth.

Both Senator Jackson and Mr. Carter made major alterations in their schedules in the last few days, with the Georgian adding several days in the state and the Senator refocusing his attention on Pittsburgh, Allegheny County and the state's western regions.

Senator Jackson apparently decided that his backing in Philadelphia, which has 40 percent of the Democratic vote, is sufficient.

In addition to organized labor, the Senator is the candidate of both Mayor Rizzo's loyalists and the regular Democratic machinery in the city, headed by Peter J. Camiel.

Although the Mayor and Mr. Camiel are archenemies, they have formed a grudging coalition behind Senator Jackson for the primary because of his endorsement by labor.

But no one is making any serious wagers—not about Philadelphia politics, a bubbly and sometimes bizarre blend of cutthroat factions, short-lived coups, heavy-handed juntas and internecine warfare.

Even Mr. Carter, who was regularly downgrading his chances in the delegate contests, has lately begun to wax optimistic.

"You can never tell in Pennsylvania," he said Thursday night.

Federal Policing Asked

PHILADELPHIA, April 24 (AP)—Bob Donahue, an aide to Mr. Carter, said today that the Federal authorities had been asked to assist in policing Tuesday's primary election because of the threatening calls made to the candidate's campaign headquarters here.

J. Clayton Undercofler, first assistant United States attorney in Philadelphia, said he would meet Monday with Federal Bureau of Investigation officials to discuss possible Federal action. He said, however, that a court order would be necessary before Federal marshals could be asked to supervise an election.

Orthodox Mark Start Of the Easter Season

Eastern Orthodox Christians yesterday marked Good Friday, commemorating the day Jesus died on the cross, and the harbinger of the Orthodox Easter Sunday.

In churches across the country, worshipers watched as priests reverently lifted a figure representing the body of Jesus from the crucifix and placed it in a symbolic grave.

The Orthodox date for Holy Week is based on a fourth-century decree of the Council of Nicea, which stipulated that Easter must be celebrated on the Sunday following the vernal equinox, but always after the Jewish Passover.

A score of Orthodox groups are represented in the Americas, with communicants totaling about four million. The Greek Orthodox Church, the biggest, has nearly two million members.

Udall, Emulating Reagan, Plans to Make Direct Fund Appeals on TV

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, April 24—Representative Morris K. Udall's two nationwide television broadcasts next week will be direct appeals to the public for funds necessary to continue his quest for the Democratic Presidential nomination, even as professional politicians and much of the press declare his candidacy to be moribund.

The Arizona Congressman, the most liberal survivor in the Democratic field, is emulating Ronald Reagan, the conservative Republican who replenished his empty war chest with a nationwide broadcast of a similar nature.

"This is an attempt to go over the heads of the so-called experts who want to write Mo off," said one of Mr. Udall's closest confidants. "The broadcasts will be a statement of what his beliefs are and an appeal for help from Americans who think as he does."

Mr. Udall has scheduled broadcasts of five minutes each—all that he can afford to buy—on ABC Monday night at 10:55 P.M., and on CBS at the same hour next Thursday.

Meanwhile Mr. Udall is considering withdrawing from full-scale campaigning in the important California primary on June 8 to give Gov. Edmond G. Brown Jr. of California a better chance of defeating former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia. However, no firm decision has on California has been made, campaign sources indicated.

There seemed to be an atmosphere of muted but unmistakable pessimism in the Udall camp as voting approached in next Tuesday's primary in Pennsylvania, a state which Mr. Udall last night described in a speech in Scranton as a nearly inexplicable "political jungle."

Mr. Udall has been saying publicly for the last few days that he expects to finish second here against Mr. Carter and Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington in both the nonbinding preferential contest and in the separate race to elect national convention delegates.

But a poll taken for Mr. Udall three weeks before Election Day showed him running significantly behind both Mr. Carter, who led the poll comfortably and Senator Jackson.

Mr. Udall faced a similar situation before the Wisconsin primary on April 6, and he came from behind and nearly won. However, Pennsylvania, with its big-city machines, its apparent conservative streak and its stubborn affection for Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, seems to be on a different political continent than either Wisconsin or New York, where Mr. Udall also ran ahead of Mr. Carter.

"This is a critical time for us," one of Mr. Udall's close advisers conceded. He added that, even if the results were close on Tuesday, the Udall staff now believes that a Carter or Jackson victory would lead many political journalists and politicians to say, "We're through."

But Mr. Udall very much wants to stay in the race.

"The cause he stands for is bigger than him, and it is important that the convention be given a choice," a close friend said. "If we can't raise any more money after Pennsylvania we probably will be through. That's why we are going over the heads of the experts to the people to ask for funds."

Based on the ratings of previous political programs, Mr. Udall's two broadcasts next week might reach audiences totaling about 32 million people. The hope is that 12,000 of them will contribute an average of $20 each, for a total of $250,000. Mr. Udall believes that he would have enough money to continue if the Federal Election Commision is reconstituted and the money raised is matched by Federal funds, and added to about $300,000 in matching funds now unavailable.

The Udall campaign would then concentrate on Connecticut, Maryland, Michigan, Oregon, Ohio and New Jersey, a campaign official said.

A decision not to mount a full campaign in California might well be interpreted as a signal that Mr. Udall was no longer a serious candidate.

But his advisers believe that Governor Brown of California is "closer to us than anyone else and liberals have spilled enough blood this year." Thus it is possible that Mr. Brown will be left to joust with Mr. Carter and Senator Jackson.

Marrow From Unrelated Donor Saves Boy in Pioneering Case

year-old Copenhagen woman, Mrs. Larsen, herself a mother of two and now an "adoptive" grandmother of Matthew, who donated the bone-marrow cells that are producing Matthew's blood cells.

Six times, Mrs. Larsen went under anesthesia to have marrow extracted from her hip bones with an oversized hypodermic needle, and seven times, the marrow cells were injected into Matthew's veins until his doctors figured out how to make it "take"—that is, take up residence in Matthew's bones and begin manufacturing the life-giving blood cells.

Ninety percent of the injected cells find their way into bones.

Nearly all the several score of successful marrow transplants thus far have been between closely related persons, usually siblings, whose tissue types were compatible.

The lessons learned from Matthew's case may eventually be applicable to thousands of patients each year with such life-threatening conditions as leukemia, aplastic anemia and inherited blood-cell disorders whose lives might be saved by a marrow transplant but who do not have brothers or sisters with compatible tissues to donate the marrow.

New Insights Gained

The case illustrates the many problems that remain to be solved even when compatible siblings are the marrow donors. It also represents the slow but steady progress in a seemingly exotic area of medical research that has already maintained the lives of many patients here and abroad.

Many of the successes and failures among the several hundred bone-marrow transplants that have been attempted in patients over the last eight years have given physician-researchers new insights into the mysterious workings of the immune system and at the same time taught them how much they still do not know about it. This system performs a dual function — it defines what is the enemy within and then marshals the forces needed to root it out.

Unlike transplants of kidneys, hearts and other organs, where the only real problem is getting the recipient's immune system to accept a foreign organ as its own, in transplanting bone marrow the problem of acceptance is double-barreled.

Not only must the recipient accept the donor's marrow but the marrow, which produces the immunologic cells of the donor, must also accept the recipient. Otherwise, after the marrow takes, it will start to reject the patient, causing a condition known as graft-versus-host, or GVH, disease, which even with a matched donor still proves fatal in a fifth to a third of marrow transplant patients.

When the marrow donor is a sibling with compatible tissues, 70 percent of patients develop some degree of GVH disease and 30 percent of patients with aplastic anemia reject the graft, reports Dr. Alexander Fefer, a member of Dr. E. Donnall Thomas's marrow transplant team at the University of Washington in Seattle.

Matching of Donors

The Seattle group, which has done more than 170 transplants in the last seven years, has the most extensive experience in the world with the procedure. Their successful transplants include those on about 30 persons with once-terminal leukemia and 50 with severe aplastic anemia (ordinarily fatal in 90 percent of cases within a few months) who are alive and well at least one year and up to five and a half years after transplant.

Three-fourths of patients with Matthew's disease who received a transplant from a matched sibling have been saved, the longest survivor being David Camp of New Haven, Conn., whose transplant was directed by Dr. Robert Good, then at the University of Minnesota, eight years ago.

"Survival has improved each year since 1969," said Dr. Thomas. "Barring some startling breakthrough, it's a matter of making a small step here and a small step there, getting better survival each time." In addition to rejection of the graft and GVH disease, remaining problems include recurrence of leukemia after a successful graft, which happens in a quarter to a third of patients who receive a transplant to replace their leukemic marrow.

Controversies abound, but the dozen or so medical teams doing bone-marrow transplants recognize the difficulties in solving their common problems and share to an unusual degree information about their techniques and new ideas that need testing.

Next month, about 30 physicians and scientists will hold a three-day working conference at Michigan State University to discuss the problems and prospects of widescale bone marrow transplantation.

Typing of Tissues

The main key to gaining acceptance of the transplant and preventing fatal GVH disease lies in finding a donor whose tissues are compatible with those of the recipient. This is determined by a process of typing—similar to blood typing—for cell factors known as histocompatibility antigens.

Studies in mice have suggested that there are at least 30 paired genetic sites in each individual that determine tissue type. Currently, tests are available to examine four of these sites, which are thought to be the major histocompatibility antigens in man.

Identical twins are the same genetically at all histocompatibility sites, so there is no difficulty transplanting bone marrow—or any other organ—between them. In nontwins, the chances are one in four that each brother or sister will inherit the same major histocompatibility antigens as another sibling, and siblings who match for these factors are likely to have other tissue antigens in common as well.

Only about 15 percent of patients who might benefit from a bone-marrow transplant have a matched sibling, and with family size now shrinking, the percentage will soon be even lower. So future widescale application of marrow transplants will necessarily depend on using more distant relatives or unrelated donors.

When two people come from different families, as did Matthew and his Danish donor, Mrs. Larsen, even a perfect match at the sites that can now be typed does not mean that other, as yet unknown tissue antigens will not cause trouble. In Matthew's case, in fact, donor and recipient are known to be different at one of the major sites.

Dr. Bo Dupont, the immunologist who directed the search for a donor for Matthew, explained that studies in animals and observations in a few patients have suggested that the most critical match for marrow transplantation involves a genetic site called the "D" histocompatibility locus. On the basis of laboratory tests, Matthew and Mrs. Larsen are believed to be identical or very similar at this locus.

Matthew's doctors, a team of six directed by Dr. Richard O'Reilly, a pediatric immunologist, working under Dr. Good, proceeded cautiously. Hoping to avoid a fatal GVH reaction, at first they gave the boy relatively small amounts of Mrs. Larsen's marrow. The first four transplants did not result in a take. Although the boy had no immunologic capabilities of his own, his body's phagocytes—garbage-collecting white blood cells—probably destroyed the "invading" cells, Dr. O'Reilly believes.

Finally, the doctors treated Matthew with a potent anticancer drug, Cytoxan, to suppress his resistance to the transplant and then gave him a much larger dose of Mrs. Larsen's cells. This time part of the graft took and Matthew started producing the white blood cells that attack viruses, fungi and cancer cells, but not those that attack bacteria.

Temporary Failure

Doctors were willing to leave well enough alone at that point since bacterial infections could be averted with gamma globulin shots and treated with antibiotics. But as soon as Matthew became exposed to everyday germs, his bone marrow failed completely and he developed aplastic anemia, lacking red cells, white cells and platelets.

So once again marrow was taken from Mrs. Larsen, frozen and flown to New York to be injected into Matthew, but there was no take. In November of last year, Mrs. Larsen herself was flown to New York. One billion marrow cells were removed from her bones (the cells are rapidly replaced in healthy individuals) and Matthew was given a potentially lethal dose of Cytoxan before the cells were slowly infused into his veins.

After this transplant, Matthew, who until now had suffered only mild GVH reactions, developed more severe GVH disease and had to be given large doses of a drug called prednisone to suppress the attempt of the marrow cells to attack his fragile body.

Slowly, the GVH reaction subsided and the new marrow started producing blood cells. By January, Matthew's blood contained normal levels of red cells, platelets and white cells, including all the white cells that attack foreign invaders. All these cells, tests showed, were derived from the marrow Mrs. Larsen had donated.

"Each step along the way was a nasty step into the unknown," Dr. O'Reilly noted.

Matthew's only remaining problems are a mild skin rash (a sign of continuing but mild GVH reaction) and some hesitancy around strangers, which is not unusual for normal two-year olds.

Matthew is also only now learning how to talk. When he speaks, he hardly moves his mouth, the result, his doctors believe, of having been spoken to all his life by people whose mouths were covered by surgical masks.

Dr. O'Reilly credits devoted nursing care and Matthew's attentive parents, who visited him daily in his hospital isolation room, for the boy's remarkably easy adjustment to the world outside.

HUMPHREY SHUNS JERSEY'S PRIMARY

proportional representation rules, Mr. Humphrey said, and also because of the success of uncommitted and favorite-son strategists in some states, he does not believe that any one will reach the first ballot with more than "Oh, 900 or 1,000 delegates, let's say."

If that proves to be the case, he said, he will be prepared to try to assemble a majority himself. But he left unclear whether he would authorize a draft-Humphrey committee to lay the groundwork well in advance of the final primaries.

That question may be resolved on Wednesday, the day after the Pennsylvania voting, at a meeting of Humphrey strategists in Washington. Two sources said, though another denied, that the decision would be tied directly to the success or failure of a stop-Carter drive here, in which pro-Humphrey elements rallied behind the candidacy of Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington.

The Jackson camp has been saying that any overt move by Mr. Humphrey would violate an understanding between the two men to the effect that Mr. Humphrey would avoid interference with the Jackson campaign through the primaries.

Senator Humphrey said he had given similar assurances to Mr. Jackson and other candidates — "Nothing signed in blood, you understand, but I told them I'd stay out of the way and let them have their run," he said. He acknowledged that his posture was far more important to Mr. Jackson than the others because he and Mr. Jackson compete for the same constituency.

As a result, Mr. Humphrey telephoned the Central Labor Council in Johnstown, Pa., 10 days ago and canceled an election-eve appearance that had angered the Jackson strategists there. No one asked him to do so, Mr. Humphrey said, adding, "I knew Scoop was unhappy about it."

Mr. Humphrey's brief flirtation with the idea of entering the New Jersey contest—or, at least, the flirtation of some of his would-be managers—was based on the notion that he needed to run somewhere to prove that he was popular in the party.

A Slate Available

A delegate slate is there for the asking. It was assembled by James Dugan, the party chairman in New Jersey, and is headed by Senator Harrison A. Williams Jr. and Representative Peter W. Rodino Jr. It is publicly uncommitted but is pro-Humphrey.

While Mr. Humphrey reportedly plans to meet with the New Jersey delegation next week, he has concluded that the national polls and statements by party leaders make the point of his popularity without his entering the primaries.

That conclusion, together with his belief that no one is likely to enter the convention with enough votes to eliminate him from competition, apparently led Mr. Humphrey to reject the New Jersey option.

But there is another element: his reluctance to be seen within the party as "a spoiler or a stopper or a no-man."

"I'm not much on stopping," the Senator said. "It doesn't work very well, for one thing, and it creates a lot of bitterness and division.

"I remember what Adali Stevenson tried to do in 1960 when it was obvious that Jack Kennedy was going to be nominated," he added. "I remember when I got talked into trying to stop George McGovern after California in '72. That was a foolish mistake, and I don't intend to repeat it."

Gallup Finds Ford Is Trailing Carter, Tied With Humphrey

By ROBERT REINHOLD

The Gallup Poll reported yesterday that President Ford would probably face a tough battle against both leading Democratic contenders, former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia and Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, if the election were held today.

The latest Gallup Poll, based on personal interviews with 1,097 registered voters throughout the United States from April 9 to 12, found Mr. Carter leading the President by 49 to 43 percent, with 8 ercent still undecided. Mr. Humphrey was about tied with Mr. Ford, 48 to 46 percent, with 6 percent unsure.

In both cases, the margin of error inherent in any such survey of political opinion—at least 4 percent plus or minus—means there is a fair chance that Mr. Ford would actually come out ahead if all American voters were questioned.

The Gallup Poll, which has been running trial heats between Mr. Ford and his strongest Democratic rivals for some months, found that Mr. Carter had slowly increased his lead over Mr. Ford as he gained publicity through his early primary victories.

Senator Humphrey, meanwhile, who lost in the polls in February and March after running about even with the President in January, is now about neck and neck again following a spate of news articles hinting that he is actively pursuing the Democratic nomination despite his abstaining from primary battle.

The Gallup results are at variance with those reported Friday in a New York Times/CBS News survey, conducted about the same time. The Times/CBS News poll found Mr. Ford running ahead of both Democrats. However, the two surveys were not strictly comparable because the Gallup Poll was based on registered voters while the Times/CBS News one made no attempt to screen out potential nonvoters at this early date.

Since the general election is more than six months off and much can happen politically before November, many political scientists tend to discount the long-range significance of such hypothetical races.

The Gallup Poll shows Mr. Carter doing better than Mr. Humphrey in the South and somewhat better among independents, although the differences in the latter case (5 percentage points) falls well within the margin of error.

Both candidates are the preference of the vast majority of non-white voters over Mr. Ford. Like the Times/CBS News Poll, the Gallup survey found little evidence that the controversy over Mr. Carter's use of the phrase "ethnic purity" damaged his standing among black voters.

Shhhh..., can't mention the status names...but they're some of seventh avenue's finest!

At one point, Mr. Reid thought a settlement was forthcoming. That occurred several weeks ago when the company offered $2 million and agreed to reduce its discharge of PCB's to practically nothing by July 1, 1977, the date set by the Federal Government, which decided last December to review the pollution discharge permit it had granted.

Mr. Reid, who originally wanted "zero" discharge by next Sept. 30, compromised and agreed to the extension.

"I thought we had it settled until it became clear that they were going to insist on complete exoneration, even though they had been found guilty of violating water quality standards," Mr. Reid said.

"In my opinion," he added, "they are taking this position not only for themselves but for all industry. Industry does not want to see a precedent set whereby they might be held responsible for the damage they do to the environment."

G.E. officially declined to comment on what offers it had made and what it wanted in the negotiations. Talks that were scheduled for last Tuesday were canceled by G.E., according to Mr. Reid, and no talks are under way now, although Mr. Sofaer has said in the hearings that he saw no reason why they should not continue while the hearings were in progress.

A spokesman for General Electric said, "We did not break off negotiations and we don't feel it is appropriate to comment further."

Deep Concern Seen

Sources within the company say privately, however, that there is deep concern over the possibility of establishing the precedent being sought by the Department of Environmental Conservation.

The general concern of the business and industrial community was underscored last week when Associated Industries of New York State, which says it represents 2,800 companies, became an intervenor. In its petition, Associated Industries said that if G.E. were ordered to restore that portion of the Hudson involved, it would have "far-reaching and serious economic consequences to Associated's members."

As for environmentalists, among even those restrained about Mr. Reid's administrative difficulties there is strong support for the continuance of the hearings so that if a settlement cannot be negotiated, the issue can be decided in the courts.

"You just don't make deals when it comes to public health and public welfare," said David Seymour, president of the Hudson River Fishermen's Association. "G.E. knew for years that PCB's were a poison and now they want to be kissed and forgiven and released and exonerated. I don't know how they can ask for it."

Fear Expressed

Fear has been expressed among environmentalists that Mr. Reid would be forced to resign and that the hearings would be either terminated or ignored by the Governor. An aide to the Governor denied on Friday that this was his intention.

Some of Mr. Reid's critics have suggested that he alone stands in the way of settlement. However, department records indicate he is listening to the advice of his own legal division.

On April 8 Mr. Reid received a memorandum from his general counsel, Robert Hallman, on G.E.'s proposed "good-faith clause."

Mr. Hallman called the clause "unacceptable" and asserted that agreeing to it "would constitute an unconscionable abrogation of the state's responsibility for controlling and abating harm from industrial discharges and, further, would constitute an unwarranted impediment to legal action by environmental orgin-izations throughout the state."

"This is far too high a price to pay," Mr. Hallman wrote, "for a settlement on any terms of this particular matter."

Mr. Hallman also contended that "the fact that G.E. has been aware of the toxic nature of PCB's at least during the last four years raises a serious question as to its 'good faith' in continuing to discharge these materials."

The company says it is now discharging about two or three pounds of PCB's a day into the river. Previously discharges were 40 to 50 pounds and more a day.

With Love To Mom: HOFFRITZ KITCHEN KNIFE SALE

2 Weeks Only

- 5 Kitchen-Size Knives
- Full-Length Molybdenum Stainless Steel Blades
- Genuine Rosewood Handles
- Brass Rivets

33⅓% OFF

Regular Price, Set of 5. $18

Sale Price Set of 5, $12

Nothing will please Mother more than a fine set of kitchen knives. Knives that are well made, well designed and easy to handle make every kitchen chore easier. And quicker. That's why Hoffritz, cutlery experts for over 40 years, has selected these five practical knives for Mother's Day giftgiving: (1) THE 7" PARING KNIFE has a 3" blade that's exactly right for dicing, peeling or trimming. (2) THE 8⅛" UTILITY KNIFE has a 4" blade that cuts sandwiches and cheeses, slices fruits and vegetables, and performs all those other daily cutting chores. (3) THE 10⅛" COOK'S KNIFE has a handy 5¾" blade to depend on for all food preparation whether it's shredding or carving, slicing or chopping. (4) THE 11¾" CARVER has a 7¼" blade to help carve a roast or bird like a professional. (5) THE 13½" SLICER has a 9" blade that slices meat thick or thin.

The blades of these knives are Molybdenum stainless for extra strength and a lasting cutting edge. The handles are fine rosewood, and are attached to the full-length blades by three brass rivets. They are made to Hoffritz specifications, and are guaranteed by Hoffritz to give you satisfaction.

Immediately after this sale, these knives will be sold at regular year-round prices. So why not buy a set for Mother now, and get another for yourself. Perfect, too, for second homes. (32093)

Trenton Prison Superintendent Accepts a Shift After Criticism

The superintendent of New Jersey's maximum-security prison in Trenton has accepted reassignment to another post within the State Departmentof Institutions and Agencies, it was announced in Trenton.

The superintendent, Alan Hoffman, had come under increasing pressure since a shootout between prisoners and guards at the Trenton State Prison in January that left one convict dead and an inmate and two guards injured.

In recent weeks Mr. Hoffman, who is 34 years old, was the target of criticism from Commissioner Ann Klein, who asked that he be relieved by the board of trustees of the state prisons. Mrs. Klein cited his failure to prevent weapons from being smuggled into the prison and disciplinary overreaction.

After a number of meetings, Mrs. Klein announced late Friday that Mr. Hoffman had agreed to become supervising superintendent of the Youth Correctional Complex, suceeding Albert Elias. The office oversees youth correctional camps and institutions operated by the Department of Institutions and Agencies.

Mrs. Klein said that pending the appointment of a new superintendent at Trenton State Prison, Mr. Hoffman's predecessor there Richard Seidl, would take over in an acting capacity. Mr. Seidl was the warden at the prison until a year ago when he was appointed superintendent of the adult complex in the department's Division of Correction and Parole.

In seeking to keep his post at Trenton State Prison, Mr. Hoffman had the support of many prison guards, 300 of whom signed a petition in his behalf.

At the same time, the Prisoners Rights Organized Defense, a Newark group, pressed a suit in Federal District Court in Trenton charging that inmates in the prison had been systematically brutalized, particularly since the January riot.

The court action resulted in a directive by Judge Clarkson S. Fisher that the prison administration halt some practices, such as frequent body searches. He also called for more testimony on the allegations of mistreatment to be heard this week.

Bicentennial Fireworks Touch Off an Objection

PITTSBURGH, April 24 (AP) —A $200,000 contract for a Bicentennial Fourth of July fireworks display in the nation's capital has been awarded to a French company.

And that angers the president of the nation's largest fireworks manufacturer, who says America's 200th birthday should be celebrated with American-made fireworks.

"Ironic," says George Zambelli, head of Zambelli Fireworks Manufacturing Inc. in New Castle, 40 miles northwest of here. "We never had a chance to bid competitively. It's the nation's capital and on public grounds.

"And we're further upset that as taxpayers with local unemployment of 11 percent, a foreign company gets this contract."

...C. to Require Electric Meter for Each Tenant

By WILL LISSNER

...t, energy conservation ..., the New York State ...Service Commission in... to require that all new ...itial, commercial and in... ...f buildings provide an ... meter for each tenant. ... commission disclosed ...day that it intended to ...ectrical service early this ...er in any new building ...cked individual metering. ...ited comments by June ... anyone who might be ...d to the action.

...he New York City area ...are now 1,400 buildings ...using developments that ...e electrical services a part of the rent. They have no individual meters. There are also several hundred commercial buildings in which electrical service is provided by submetering—with the landlord buying electricity in bulk and retailing it to the tenants.

Because of alleged gouging by landlords, submetering was abolished in 1951, but the buildings that had it have been permitted to continue it.

The commission said it was aware that it could not require existing buildings that lack individual meters to install them. But it announced that it intended to reconsider the ban on submetering as a way of introducing metered service to such buildings.

Providing unlimited electricity for a uniform charge in the rent is "a wasteful practice" that "provides no incentive for conserving energy" or even for using it rationally the commission said in its order.

It said that with the possibility of profit, landlords might be willing to make the investment that provision of individual meters would require and recover their outlay for metering equipment in monthly increments.

Power Plant Site Is Opposed by U.S.

By HAROLD FABER
By United Press International

PRATTSVILLE, N.Y., April 23—A Federal Power Commission report, just issued, has concluded that the New York State Power Authority's proposed hydroelectric power project at Breakabeen in Schoharie County would have "significant adverse impacts on the environment."

The commission staff agreed with major agricultural leaders of the state who have argued that the Breakabeen project would result in the flooding of prime, irreplaceable farmland along the banks of the Schoharie Creek.

But even before the report was issued, the Power Authority, which had been severely criticized by other state agencies and local residents for the Breakabeen proposal, selected this Greene County community, about 10 miles to the south, as an alternate and preferred site.

The Case for Prattsville

The Federal experts said that the Prattsville location, which would make use of an existing New York City reservoir, would have a lessened environmental impact and significantly fewer adverse socioeconomic results. There have been few, if any, objections here to the proposed plant in contrast to the hostile reception at Breakabeen.

In addition to marking the practical end of the Breakabeen controversy, the Federal report gave added impetus to the selection of the Prattsville site. Its selection could set a pattern for the multipurpose use of existing city reservoirs upstate. At present, the reservoir waters are used only for fishing, in addition to the prime function of storage.

Final engineering studies on Prattsville are now underway and should be submitted to the commission next month, according to a spokesman for the Power Authority. If a license to build is granted, it would be five years before the new project, with a cost estimated at $200 million, could be completed.

Meanwhile, negotiations are also going on about the use of city water with New York operation, but who have said their prime concern was the City water officials, who have agreed on the concept of co-safety and maintenance of the city's water supply.

At present, the picturesque Schoharie Creek provides not only drinking water for New York City, stored in the Schoharie Reservoir, but also power at the Blenheim-Gilboa project, which went into operation in 1973 providing a million kilowatts to the Power Authority grid.

A pump-storage operation, Blenheim-Gilboa pushes water to an upper reservoir in periods of low consumption, but at peak periods of use it discharges the water, which then rushes down to a powerhouse to generate the needed electricity.

When Blenheim-Gilboa was being built, the Power Authority proposed to build a similar plant five miles to the north, at Breakabeen, mainly to provide power for the Metropolitan Transportation Authority and other customers in New York City.

Opposition was recorded by local dairy and vegetable farmers and from the State Department of Agriculture and Markets, the Agricultural Resources Commission and the State Department of Environmental conservation. Last year, Governor Carey announced that the Power Authority would undertake a comprehensive study of an alternate site at the less populated and thickly forested area of Prattsville.

Mr. Schwebel's debts grew, he pressed Yi-han for more paintings and they finally agreed that Mr. Schwebel would sell a total of 14 large Chinese scrolls dating from the 10th through the 17th century.

On Dec. 20, 1971, Mr. Schebel had Yi-han attest to the fact, for "insurance reasons," that the paintings belonged to the "Munroe Schwebel collection." Four days later, Mr. Schwebel took this affirmation and the paintings to the bank.

That night, Dec. 24, 1971, Mr. Schwebel died of a heart attack. The problems for Chase only became more complex.

A legal battle started between Mr. Chang and Chase Manhattan bank for possession of the paintings, valued at more than $700,000.

The legal issue before the state Supreme Court was whether Chase had acted in "good faith" in receiving the paintings as a pledge.

Frank Patton Jr. of the law firm of Ellis, Stringfellow, Patton & Liebovitz took the position that "gross carelessness" by the bank had jeopardized their claim of "good faith."

Andrew J. Connick of the firm of Millbank, Tweed, Hadley & McCloy, contended that the bank did act in good faith and had acted reasonably under the circumstances.

On April 8, Justice Nusbaum awarded the paintings to Mr. Chang in an oral decision that called Chase's procedures in the case "pathetic" and "incomprehensible."

In his ruling, he said that "good faith" by the bank had not been proved because "no proper credit checks were made," because "no effort was made to ascertain whether the defendant had title to the paintings" and because "nothing concrete was ever done or any affirmative steps taken to remedy the situation, but the money flowed on."

Price for Babies Rising In Wider Black Market

LOS ANGELES, April 24 (AP)—Babies are being sold in a fast-growing black market that charges anywhere from $5,000 for an illegal adoption to $50,000 for a custom-made child.

Healthy white infants have become such a profitable commodity in the United States that law enforcement officials fear the Mafia will soon become involved.

"It's a racket very susceptible to organized crime," said Deputy District Attorney Richard Moss of Los Angeles. He said there already seems to be a "looseiy connected organization of child traffickers cooperating with each other in transporting babies across state lines."

Some states say they are dusting off ancient antislavery statutes to combat the flourishing people trade. Others are waiting for Senator Walter F. Mondale's subcommittee on children and youth to come up with Federal legislation.

Meanwhile, baby brokers are taking advantage of gray areas and loopholes in state adoption laws. And they are profiting because the demand for a certain type of baby exceeds the supply.

"We're going through an incredible, nationwide baby hunger at a time when adoptable infants are becoming scarce," said Charlotte DeArmond of the California Children's Home Society.

There is no shortage of children as such. Illegitimate births are at an all-time high of more than 400,000 a year, and the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare says 120,000 children are available "for whom adoption would be best."

But they are either too old, the wrong color, or afflicted with muscular dystrophy, cerebral palsy or various psychological ailments. Selective foster parents are lining up for another kind of child: white, newborn, healthy and unwanted.

Changing social mores, improved contraceptives, liberalized abortion laws and society's fading disapproval of unwed mothers makes this child a rarity. Thus he has become a prime target of black marketeers.

"The waiting list for white babies is now three to five years, while you can get a black baby in nine months," said Mrs. DeArmond.

Joseph Reid of the Child Welfare League of America said legitimate adoption agencies simply cannot compete with unscrupulous profiteers who offer pregnant girls large sums of money and pay all the medical bills for healthy white babies.

"Potatoes or babies, whenever a shortage develops a black market is going to fill the void," he said.

Children's agency officials estimate that one baby is sold on the black market for every 20 who find a home through legal adoption procedures. Mr. Moss said Californians, who have the reputation for being trailblazers in bizarre consumer trends, have done so in the baby-selling area too.

One California mother once gave her baby to a broker for a used car, and a childless couple paid $50,000 for a baby "made to order," selecting the parents from photographs of attractive, young, single men and women in an album compiled by their lawyer.

Some lawyers have placed classified ads in California newspapers ("Young people wish to adopt baby at birth. Will pay doctor and hospital bills. Replies confidential") and others are paying finders fees to college students for every pregnant coed they find on campus.

Mr. Moss said he is keeping watch on such developments in his state; but said he is powerless to prosecute for lack of evidence.

"The mother who sells her child won't talk because she's been paid off," he said.

Before you drink another glass of water you'd better read this.

CAUTION: Depending on where you live, the next glass of water from your kitchen tap could possibly contain the following: asbestos, microscopic "nematodes," cadmium, arsenic, viruses, bacteria, hydrogen sulphide, lead benzene and pesticides.

Now protect your family from hazardous drinking water with a new kind of patented home filtration system that costs pennies a day.

PLUS 30 DAY HOME TRIAL

This is a good news/bad news ad. First the bad news.

Everything you've heard about polluted drinking water is true. It's awful.

Nobody knows the exact numbers but most authorities agree a shocking percentage of local water supply systems cannot pass a Public Health Service test. Or an Environmental Protection Agency test. Or a Department of Health, Education & Welfare test.

And that means a lot more than funny tasting water. It could mean poisons. And pesticides. It could mean viruses that somehow withstand chlorination. It could mean cancer-producing agents in your family's drinking water. Like lead. And mercury. And asbestos (particularly insidious because its nasty results take 20 to 30 years to show up—when it's too late.)

Scare stories? Okay, try these . . .

- A former official of the Department of Health, Education & Welfare, estimates that at least 90% of municipal systems kill only bacteria, letting viruses, chemicals and other pollutants slip unimpeded into your home, your glass and your body.*
- In a 1969 study—the most recent made—30% of samples taken at consumer taps showed minerals in excess of the Public Health Service limits.*
- This quote from an authority of the Dartmouth Medical School: "There is little doubt that cadmium pollution is a major factor in human high blood pressure, from which 23 million Americans suffer."*
- One HEW study concluded that 23 million Americans are drinking water that violates the Federal Safety Standards established in 1962.

How did this happen?

The water you drink doesn't just accumulate from pristine pure upland mountain streams.

At least half the water supplied to municipal systems has in fact been discharged from a city or industrial sewer only hours before, treated quickly and often inadequately, and then pumped back into the system.

And the system itself was probably designed long before there was any knowledge of viruses, pathogens, carcinogens and industrial pollution.

While we're all waiting for someone to do something about it (one water control bill has been holed up in Congress for four years) . . .

The time bomb is ticking.

This very minute, scientists tell us microscopic creatures called "nematodes," laden with bacteria and resistant to chlorination, are pouring out of faucets "in some areas of the country."

But nematodes are only a trifling annoyance compared with some of the products of modern industrialization.

Researchers warn us the human body wasn't designed to handle substances such as asbestos, pesticides or "heavy" metals like mercury, lead and cadmium, and that the long term effects of their accumulation in the body may include cancer.

Chlorine—the cure that may be almost as Bad as the disease.

The best example of the time bomb effect may be in your tap water now—chlorine. Chlorine does a good job of fending off epidemic diseases like dysentery, cholera and typhoid. But more and more, chlorine may turn out to be a villain in its own right. A growing body of research points unmistakably to the possibility that chlorine is responsible for the tremendous upsurge in the incidence of heart disease, cancer and premature senility, all of which have shown pronounced increases since water systems have been chlorinated.

Bottled water. Up to now the only (and expensive) answer.

Drinking unchlorinated bottled "pure spring" water—advocated by nutritionists and other health experts—is half an answer. Despite irregularities uncovered by the EPA in a survey of water bottling plants last year, most bottled water is what it says it is. (Just be sure the label states "pure spring." — some bottlers are using "public supply.")

It's an expensive answer—you could easily spend $200 or more per year—twice that if you cook with it too.

Now there's a better alternative, a new way to enjoy water as good as the finest bottled spring water—but at a fraction of the cost.

Now for the good news: Meet Rejuvenation Industries. We have a filtration system.

Here's how it works. It's a filter that can be installed conveniently and inconspicuously in your own kitchen. It comes with a cartridge that's replaceable.

Once you have one installed, your water contamination problems are over—forever. Every drop of water from your kitchen tap will be as clean and clear as the driven snow. In fact, more so. How come?

The activated carbon filter. Its two-fold secret.

Activated carbon itself is the most efficient purification "media" available. It filters out solid impurities. It traps viruses and bacteria. (Including infectious hepatitis.) It filters out heavy metals such as lead, mercury and cadmium. It absorbs chemical pollutants and pesticides. It even absorbs chlorine. Thus, you get all the benefits of chlorine as a disinfecting agent—with none of its potentially long-term dangerous side effects.

Here is our filter's all important second benefit:

Patented dual chamber design. This means that the water being filtered does not come in contact with material previously filtered by the system. It insures that organic solids cannot reach the activated carbon. EVERY DROP THAT COMES FROM OUR SYSTEM IS FREE OF POLLUTANTS AND CONTAMINANTS. EVERY DROP IS LIKE DRINKING CLEAR, FRESH SPRING WATER.

So that at last you and your family can be assured that you have done everything possible to protect your health.

By now you must be asking, how do I get my hands on one of these remarkable filters?

WE'LL PROVIDE YOU ONE ON A LOW COST 30 DAY TRIAL BASIS.

Call us at the number listed below. Or fill out and send us the coupon.

We will come to your home and install the Rejuvenation Industries Filter System on your kitchen tap.

All you pay is $9.95 to cover part of our out-of-pocket cost.

(And you know what plumbers charge these days.)

We will leave the filtration system in your home for 30 days. During that time your family will undergo a remarkable experience. You'll taste water again. In your coffee. In your soups and stews. In your mixed drinks.

You'll thrill to the taste of real orange juice when you add water—and nothing but water—to your frozen juice concentrates.

Best of all, you'll be living with the assurance your loved one are protected.

Now—clean, clear water for pennies a day.

At the end of 30 days—if you don't agree our filtration system everything we've said it is—if you aren't totally and unconditionally delighted—we'll remove the filter—you pay nothing more.

If you do agree with us that every drop of water from your kitchen tap tastes better than it ever tasted before and if you do want to continue to protect your family, the filter stays in and all you pay us $37.50—the cost of the cartridge.

Our deal includes a hidden plus . . .

WE'RE GIVING YOU A $139.95 FILTER FREE FOR BUYING OUR CARTRIDGES.

It's true. If sold at retail, our filter would cost you $139.95. Yet it costs you nothing.

We're so convinced that once you've tried it, you'll stay our customer for life, WE WILL LET YOU HAVE THE PERMANENT USE OF THE FILTER IN YOUR HOME AT NO ADDITIONAL COST.

All you need do is purchase your cartridges from us. And we guarantee that every cartridge will last your family at least one year —no ands, ifs or buts.

So that for a total outlay of only $37.50 a year you can help solve the problem of hazardous drinking water once and for all. You can insure your family clean, fresh, clear water—as much of it as you care to use—even water for cooking!—for just 10c a day.

It's the cheapest insurance you ever bought.

ACT NOW

Installation of these units will be on a first come first-served basis. If protecting your family is important to you, then call or write us now to get the Rejuvenation Industries filter system into your home tomorrow.

*Source material available on request.

Mr. Wall was all ardent manhood as the Prince, partnering with unobtrusive courtliness, and dancing really strongly. He articulates the phrases in a variation well these days and yet this sharpness of defination is not bought at the price of jerkiness. And his acting — that imaginistic portrayal of youth, love, betrayal and tragedy — is marked by its clarity and unaffected fervor.

There were many other cast changes from the first performance of the season last Thursday. In the first act pas de trois, for example, Lesley Collier and the always ebullient Wayne Sleep excelled, I liked Derek Deane and Wayne Eagling (who is so far having an excellent season) in the Ashton pas de quatre, and also Ann Jenner and Christopher Carr in the Neapolitan Dance.

Incidentally, just as a sign of the times, with only two exceptions the six men in the quite difficult First Act waltz were completely diferent from the first night. It shows the strength of the company's male dancing in its lower ranks.

Grand Union's Skits Now More Formula Than Improvisation

Since its inception seven years ago, the Grand Union has changed a bit in personnel, but little in basic orientation. It started as a sophisticated playground for choreographers who regularly presented concerts of their own work separately, while convening the old gang for occasional evenings of improvisation. Friday evening at the La Mama Annex, Barbara Dilly, Douglas Dunn, David Gordon, Nancy Lewis and Valda Setterfield gave a concert with touches of fun but left this viewer feeling that perhaps he had been to the same party too often with the same companions.

Words, movement and music whirled about as members reacted to one another in movement or verbal commentary. Mr. Gordon's role as the genial, witty master of ceremonies seems assured, as is Miss Lewis's as the daffy dame. In the final skit she began to confess and Mr. Gordon tied her to a cross for her trouble. Mr. Dunn, the all-Amerian boy, tossed her an orange segment, which she caught with all the aplomb of Sharkey the seal.

Miss Dilly's role as the self-possessed outsider, tootling along sketching movement designs and waiting for something of consequence to happen remained much the same. Mr. Dunn, playing the hick from the sticks, followed her for a while with his suitcase firmly in hand and, at another point, Miss Lewis flashed past on a skate board to create a momentary stir. Miss Setterfield added a Buster Keatonish element to the group as she persevered in her simple course no matter what the obstacles. The novelty of the Grand Union approach is past though and is being replaced by formula.

Marilyn Horne Sings From Operas of 10 Composers

By ALLEN HUGHES

Marilyn Horne demonstrated her vocal prowess and endurance a t Carnegie Hall on Friday night with a recital of recitatives, arias, cavatinas, cabalettas and what not drawn from operas of 10 composers from Handel to Massenet by way of Rossini, Meyerbeer, Donizetti, Verdi and Saint-Saëns, among others.

Since the point of much that she sang was florid vocal display of one sort or another, it was an evening in which vocal ornaments of all kinds were tossed about with great abandon. Miss Horne is just the sort of singer to do this.

Her voice is agile and maintains an even quality through almost any workout.

It was, then, an evening of bravura accomplishment that few other singers could equal even if they wanted to. And, let's face it, not every singer would necessarily want to. Such a program can have little expressive continuity or development, and the esthetic rewards are likely to be slight.

This was an exhibition, and it showed that Miss Horne is most compelling when dealing light-heartedly with a saucy text. She had her greatest success with the "Non, non, non, non, non, non" aria from Meyerbeer's "Les Huguenots." Here, her naturally fun-loving spirit identified with the nature of the work to the point that her voice took on a vibrancy it had not had during all the solemn arias that came before.

If Miss Horne were a star on Broadway she would surely be playing comedy rather than tragedy, and ideally she should do the equivalent of that in opera and on the concert stage. She does sometimes, of course, and is hugely successful at it, but given the existing vocal repertory, the demands of the public and the economic realities of the music business, she is subject to miscasting so far as temperament is concerned.

Most of the material in this recital was of the oh-so-serious variety, and much of the time she was a bit distant from it. Aided by the fluent and sensitive piano accompaniments of Martin Katz, she sang it all conscientiously, even brilliantly, but little of the real Marilyn Horne seemed wholly involved in it.

BROMBERG, GOODMAN PLEASE FOLK FANS

David Bromberg has every reason to think he can perform any kind of American folk or popular music credibly. He is an exceptionally proficient guitarist in a variety of styles, and his band includes a number of versatile musicians who can shift instruments and idioms with ease.

But Mr. Bromberg seems to be afraid someone will take him seriously. His vocals are almost invariably throwaways, and he plays country music, bluegrass, blues and rock-and-rroll with the same glib proficiency and lack of commitment.

Steve Goodman, who opened Mr. Gromberg's concert at Avery Fisher Hall on Friday, is a better singer, though not an exceptional one. Most of his music sounds like an undistinguished approximation of the charming rural material Mr. Bromberg performs. But if one enjoys energetic stage presence and lyrics that delineate familiar situations and political homilies pithily, then Mr. Goodman is well worth hearing.

This reviewer found both performers tolerable, but the hall was filled with fans who greeted everything they did with the same ecstatic roar.

Walter Trampler and Richard Goode played Bach's Sonata in D for Gamba and Harpsichord on the viola and piano, and by dint of their superior musicianship made one forget the anachronistic instruments. Villa-Lobos's "Bachianas Brasileiras No. 6," scored for flute and bassoon, was a deftly contrasting companion piece from our own times. Paula Robison, flutist, and Loren Glickman, bassoonist, blew up a virtuoso storm, and it was tremendous fun.

Dvorak's Trio in F minor (Op. 65) ended the concert in a bath of comfortably warm Romanticism. It is vintage Dvorak and was played to its last nance by Mr. Goode, Oscar Shumsky, violinist, and Leslie Parnas, cellist.

The performance had been scheduled to offer Elizabeth Haley's first Rosina with the company, but instead there was Gianna Rolandi, who gave as pert an account of the coloratura soprano version of the part as one might have wished. The rest of the familiar cast included Tullio Pane as Almaviva, decent but less comfortable than he is in less ornamented music; Richard McKee as a functionally-pompous Bartolo and Arnold Voketaitis as an amusing, low-comedy Basilio. Luigi Martelli conducted raggedly.

MRS. STACY SINGS IN SUPERB FASHION

Carolee Coombs-Stacy chose a demanding program for her New York debut in Carnegie Recital Hall Friday night, then proceeded to justify her choices. Ranging from the languorousness of Debussy's "Chansons de Bilitis" through Purcell, Brahms, Schumann and Nin to the quicksilver of Stravinsky, the soprano, excellently accompanied by Nancy Revzen, displayed a large voice that was dead on pitch and under superb control.

Her handling of slow legato and long-breathed dynamics was masterful — what a Bach and Handel singer she must be! — yet she could also toss off fast passages with ease, while having no trouble with the various languages encountered.

Her voice whitens rather severely under pressure at the top (which is less rich than the rest of the voice), and in the Brahms and Schumann groups she was somewhat emotionally restrained. But make no mistake; this is a talent. If Mrs. Stacy ever lets it out consistently the way she did for Joaquin Rodrigo's delicious "De los alamos vengo, madre," she'll go far.

PATRICK J. SMITH

JAZZ IMPROVISATION BY HEMPHILL, WADUD

Julius Hemphill, an alto saxophonist and composer from St. Louis, first attracted attention in the jazz world with a recording he produced himself, "Dogon A.D." His ensemble included Abdul Wadud's electric cello and produced a very unusual sound, with the cello serving as both bass and chording instrument.

Friday evening at the La Mama Theater, Mr. Hemphill and Mr. Wadud presented the first concert in the "Music for Cartographers" series, which will continue there Fridays and Saturdays through the end of May. Saxophone and cello may sound like a limiting instrumentation, but in the hands of Mr. Hemphill and Mr. Wadud it worked beautifully.

The cellist set the mood for much of the music with ostinatos, interpolated chords and melodic figures. Mr. Hemphill darted agilely around the key centers he suggested, building extensive improvisations on tonics only marginally related to them and then dramatically resolving his lines with a single, well-conceived phrase.

Charles Grutzner, 72, Is Dead; Crime Reporter for The Times

Charles Grutzner, an investigative reporter who specialized in reporting on organized crime for The New York Times, died of cancer yesterday in Midtown Hospital. He was 72 years old and lived in Greenwich, Conn.

In his career, which began in 1926, Mr. Grutzner worked as an entertainment and humor columnist, political reporter, copy editor, general assignment reporter, housing affairs reporter and war correspondent in Korea, as well as an investigative reporter.

In 1963 he became one of the first reporters on a daily newspaper to specialize in coverage of organized crime on a full-time basis.

For this coverage, which continued until his retirement in 1971, Mr. Grutzner received several awards. In 1964, for his reportage on the purposes and powers of the State Liquor Authority, he won the Mike Berger Award, given by the Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism.

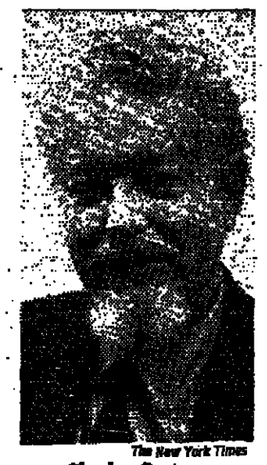
In 1966, Mr. Grutzner won the Newspaper Reporters Association's Byline Award for his disclosures of the Mafia's infiltration into business. He won another Byline Award in 1970 for an article on links between New Jersey political figures and the Mafia.

Writing in The Silurian News, a journalistic society's newspaper, in 1969, Mr. Grutzner commented on his crime coverage:

"'What do you hear from the mob?' has become almost a standard teasing greeting I get from acquaintances, relatives, cops and Federal agents since I became The Times's Mafia-watcher.

"Truth is," he continued, "I hear nothing of any consequence directly from the mob. The best stories about organized crime, including the inner politics of the organization, result from just piecing together bits of information or conjecture obtained from different official sources (not always in agreement), checking records of unsolved murders or of trials deemed too insignificant for the newspapers to have covered, and then putting the jigsaw puzzle together."

Mr. Grutzner's coverage of housing affairs in 1959 won him a Citizens Budget Commission citation for "exceptional work" on Title I slum clearance articles.



The New York Times
Charles Grutzner

Before joining The Times, Mr. Grutzner worked for The Brooklyn Times, The Paterson (N.J.) Press-Guardian, The Queens Evening News, The Long Island Daily Star, The Brooklyn Daily Eagle and the City News Association.

Mr. Grutzner himself prominently figured in a 1955 investigation by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, headed by Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi. Winston Burdett, then and still a CBS correspondent, told the committee that he and other journalists who had worked for The Brooklyn Eagle had been members of the Communist Party. One of those named by Mr. Burdett was Charles Grutzner.

The Eastland committee called 11 persons named by Mr. Burdett and all except Mr. Grutzner pleaded the Fifth Amendment. Mr. Grutzner testified that he joined the party in 1937 and left it in 1940 because of "cumulative" disenchantment at the party's lack of democracy.

Two Dispatches Cited

Senator Eastland accused Mr. Grutzner of filing two dispatches from Korea in 1950 that indirectly aided the Communists. One reported to the robbery of a store and the roughing up of Koreans by a 'small group' of United States soldiers. The other reported the first use of Air Forces F-86 jets in Korea.

On the first article, Mr. Grutzner said he felt that if a small percentage of soldiers "was giving us a bad name over there I felt people back here should know about it."

On the second dispatch, it was pointed out that The Times had received clearance from Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, then Air Force Chief of Staff, allowing publication on the F-86 flights.

Mr. Grutzner was born Aug. 6, 1903, in Brooklyn, son of Charles and Alma Grutzner. He graduated from Manual Traning High School in Brooklyn, studied engineering at the Copper Union and, while working as a toolmaker, took a one-year journalism course at the City College of New York and then joined The Brooklyn Times.

Held Several Posts

Mr. Grutzner was a charter member of the Newspaper Guild of New York, a member of the Silurians—an organization of persons working in journalism 25 years or more—and a former president of the New York Reporters Association, now the New York Press Club.

He is survived by his wife, the former Ruth Tobiassen; three daughters, Mrs. Thomas Nash, Mrs. Andrew Frankel and Carla Beck; three brothers, Walter, Harry and Victor, and several grandchildren.

The funeral service will be held Tuesday at 1 P.M. at Frank E. Campbell's, Madison Avenue at 81st Street. The family will receive friends at the chapel tomorrow evening after 5 o'clock.

New York City Flu Vaccinations Slated

Vaccination against swine influenza will be offered to New York City residents late this summer under the direction of a city immunization task force, Mayor Beame said yesterday. The group, to be headed by First Deputy Health Commissioner Pascal James Imperato, will administer the vaccine to persons over 65 years old and to those with chronic diseases in August, Mr. Beame said. A second campaign in September will offer the vaccine to all other persons, he said.

"Health experts," Mr. Beame said in a statement, "have informed me that the risk of a widespread swine flu epidemic is sizable and that the illness may be very severe. We are therefore taking steps now to protect the health of our citizens against this new strain of influenza."

Stern Proposes Pinball-Machine Tax

Councilman-at-large Henry J. Stern, Liberal of Manhattan, proposed that the city tax receipts from pinball machines at the same time as it approves a pending bill to legalize the machines. "A pinball tax," he said, "would be a painless way to raise at least $10 million a year and possibly more. People could enjoy the game and help the city at the same time."

The bill to legalize the machines, which are now outlawed here, was approved by the Council's consumer affairs committee on April 2. It is now before the full Council, which will meet Tuesday.

Gas-Saving Program Announced

An experimental program to determine how much natural gas can be saved by replacing pilot lights with electric igniters in home heating systems has been announced by Governor Carey. The program involves the replacement of pilot lights in 1,700 one-family and two-family homes served by the Brooklyn Union Gas Company. The project, financed by the Federal government, is a cooperative effort by Brooklyn Union and the New York State Public Service Commission.

Council on Handicapped Sets Hearing

The New York State Council on the Handicapped will hold public hearings to determine how to improve the ability of those with handicaps to live as independently as possible. Hearings will be held June 2 in Buffalo, June 9 in New York City, June 16 in Syracuse and June 23 in Hauppauge, L. I. Dr. Kervin M. Cahill, special assistant to Governor Carey, and Secretary of State Mario Cuomo will preside.

EDWARD M. GREEN

Edward M. Green, former president and chairman of the Dauphin Deposit Trust Company of Harrisburg, Pa., died Friday at his home in nearby Camp Hill. He was 71 years old.

A graduate of Harrisburg Academy and Princeton University, Mr. Green was president from 1962 to 1964 of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches and from 1964 to 1968 a member of the Pennsylvania Commission on Human Rights.

He leaves his wife, the former Charlotte Schriver, and a brother.

MARION LANSING WADE

Marion Lansing Wade, who had been active in social and charitable work in Suffern, N. Y., and Mahwah, N. J., for many years, died of cancer Wednesday in the Neurological Institute of the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center. She was 53 years old and lived in Mahwah and South Yarmouth, Mass.

Mrs. Wade, a 1943 graduate of Mount Holyoke College, leaves her husband, Richard D. Wade; seven children, a brother and six grandchildren.

DAVID J. WILSON

SALT LAKE CITY, April 24 (AP)—David J. Wilson, former senior United States Customs Court judge in New York, died yesterday at the age of 86.

Mr. Wilson, appointed by President Eisenhower in 1954, served on the bench 12 years before returning to Utah.

He and his wife, the former Mary Jacobs, were Mormon missionaries at the New York World's Fair in 1965.

JAMES FLAVIN, 69, CHARACTER ACTOR

Player of Marine Sergeants and Tough Policemen Dies

James Flavin, veteran Hollywood character actor who played tough-talking detectives, Marine sergeants and policemen, died Friday in Los Angeles of a ruptured aorta. He was 69 years old.

Mr. Flavin's last role was as President Eisenhower in the NBC-TV special "The Gary Francis Powers Story," completed only three weeks ago. The film is based on the U-2 spying incident.

His first film appearance was in "King Kong" in 1931. He went on to play supporting roles in more than 400 motion pictures and television programs.

These included "Knute Rockne, All-American," "Grapes of Wrath," "Mister Roberts," "The Last Hurrah," "Meet McGraw," "The Lucy Show" and "The Brady Bunch."

In 1969, Mr. Flavin appeared on Broadway as one of the wise-cracking reporters in the revival of "The Front Page."

In an interview a few years ago, the actor said he had played in "The Front Page" eight times in stock companies in the West.

"I played Walter Burns, the managing editor, and almost every other role in the show except Hildy Johnson," he said.

"In all the years, with the movies, television and stage appearance, I think the longest time I have ever been out of work was a whole two weeks."

Born in Portland, Me., Mr. Flavin was a graduate of the United States Military Academy. He opted for acting instead of the Army and played in a number of stock companies before leaving Broadway for Hollywood.

He leaves his wife, the former Lucile Brown.

for Charles Dana Gibson and for the type of American girlhood that Gibson made famous.

By 1911, when he first came to New York, Mr. Tobey had taught himself to draw in a manner acceptable to editors. He had a gift for "a likeness," he was quick and reliable, and his winning ways endeared him to many a distinguished sitter for portraits. He had a show of portrait drawings at Knoedler's gallery in New York in 1917, and by 1922 he was known as someone who could catch the essence of a given scene in a very few minutes.

Forthright, Undeceived

He never lost this facility, which was paralleled by his discerning and forthright way with words and his undeceived eye for human quality. Then as later, he cared nothing for celebrity, money or power, preferring to assess each individual by standards of his own devising.

From the moment that his "Broadway" won a $500 purchase prize in an "Artists for Victory" exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in 1942, Mr. Tobey's idiosyncratic mixture of shrewd observation, Oriental calligraphy and a delicate motor energy won him an ever-widening popularity.

From 1944 onward he showed at the Willard Gallery in New York (and, latterly, at the Galerie Beyeler in Basel). In 1961 he won first prize at the Carnegie International in Pittsburgh, and he had major museum shows in New York, London, Paris and many other cities. He was also a poet, a pianist and a composer. In 1956, was elected a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

After 1958, when he won first prize for painting at the 29th Venice Biennale, Mr. Tobey was an international figure whose paintings were sought after by museums and private collectors the world over.

The Seattle Art Museum is said to have the largest collection of his work. Among other museums in which he is represented are the Metropolitan, the

Jan K. Muhlert

Museum of Modern Art, the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts, the Chicago Art Institute, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and the Phillips Memorial Gallery in Washington, as well as private collections in this country and abroad.

By the standards of Abstract Impressionism, and of Pop Art and color-field painting, his work had a look almost of diffidence. But it was never wise to write him off as a saintly old gentleman whom time had passed by.

As a sick man in his 80's he more than once manifested in large paintings a sustained physical energy that astonished his admirers; and he retained to the last a salty, uncompromising outlook on life that found outlet in many an unpublished drawing.

Mr. Tobey will be remembered not only as a very fine painter but also as an authentic American original.

There are no immediate survivors.

A funeral service will be held Tuesday at St. Alban's Church in Basel. Burial will also be in Basel.

DAVID SCHULKIND, PRINT LEADER, 81

Lawson Ex-President Dies —Made Binding Advances

David W. Schulkind, who was credited with introducing many advances in the binding and finishing of books and other publications in more than half a century in the printing industry, died Friday at his home in Palm Beach, Fla. He was 81 years old.

Mr. Schulkind was associated for four decades with the E. P. Lawson Company, a New York manufacturer of binding machinery founded in 1898. He was a top salesman in his 20's and bacem sales manager in 1922 and vice president a year later.

In 1942, Mr. Schulkind joined with William Hourigan, Lawson Williams and Herman Sinnigen to purchase Lawson and was elected president. A few years later the company began making its own cutters, trimmers and drills and developed a world market.

In the 1950's the company became a subsidiary and then a division of Miehle-Goss-Dexter, one of the largest b ilders and distributors of cutting machines in the country, with Mr. Schulkind continuing as president of the Lawson division. He retired a few years later.

Mr. Schulkind received the Brotherhood Medal of the National Conference of Christians and Jews in 1955. He was a member of the Graphic Arts Square Club, the Paper Club of New York, the Litho Club of New York, the Printers Supply Salesmen's Guild and the Club of Printing House Craftsmen of New York.

Survivors include his wife, the former Betty Singer; a son, Eugene, a professor of French literatureand history at Sussex University in England; two sisters, Florence Frith and Adelaide Frank, and three grandchildren.

problem in surgical operations on such patients, but this risk is now avoided by suitable administration of vitamin K."

Another condition in which the use of vitamin K proved important was in the postnatal care of infants. Newborn babies, Professor Dam had stated, were "more or less vitamin K deficient." Adminitration of the vitamin immediately after birth, however, was credited with preventing thousands of postnatal deaths from hemorrhage.

Came to U.S. in '40

Carl Peter Henrik Dam was born in Copenhagen on Feb. 21, 1895. His father, Emil Dam, was a pharmaceutical chemist, and his mother, Emilie Peterson Dam, a teacher. After studying at the Polytechnic Institute in Copenhagen, the son taught and conducted research for 15 years at various institutions in Europe.

Under the auspices of the American-Scandinavian Foundation, Professor Dam came to America to lecture in the United States and Canada in 1940-41. Rather than return to Denmark, then under Nazi domination, he accepted the post in 1942 of senior research associate at the Strong Memorial Hospital, affiliated with the school of medicine and dentistry of the University of Rochester. He was to remain there until 1945, when he became an associate member of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research.

Shared With Doisy

For the discovery of vitamin K, Professor Dam was awarded his Nobel Prize in 1943, an honor shared with Dr. Edward A. Doisy, the American scientist who analyzed the chemical nature of vitamin K and succeeded in producing it synthetically.

Because of World War II, the Nobel Prize committee for the first time held its ceremonies in the United States, and the presentation of the prizes to Professor Dam and Dr. Doisy took place in New York in December 1944.

Professor Dam returned to Copenhagen in June 1946 to become professor of biochemistry and head of the biology department of the Polytechnic Institute, an appointment that had been made in absentia in 1941.

Upon his arrival in Copenhagen, he sharply criticized American hospitals, saying that "there are few really good ones in the United States, where there is too much business in the whole system."

He was the author of more than 100 papers for international scientific journals. He was a member of the American Institute of Nutrition, the American Society of Biological Chemistry, the Society for Experimental Biology and Medicine, the American Botanical Society and various scientific organizations abroad.

Cleaning House for Bachelors: The Pleasure of Their Absence

By VIRGINIA LEE WARREN

Some people, it seems, never have any trouble getting excellent, dependable and loving household help. They are bachelors, and after women have had one or two of them for an employer, they usually try not to work for anyone else.

Doris Cook, for instance, considers herself lucky to be cleaning for seven of them and she prizes them all, even the one who expects her to water 150 plants and walk his dog.

Men are preferred, say the women, not because they pay more—they don't—but because they're easier to work for in every way; they're less hard to please, they say what they want done and then leave the woman alone, and they're usually neater.

But that's only part of it. While they seem almost unaware of it themselves, the unattached men and the women who look after their apartments gradually develop a quite special relationship; this, despite the fact that they seldom see each other.

Eases Her Burden

A kind of affection evolves out of mutual respect, and, best of all, there is an amused tolerance in situations that might be expected to cause anger or resentment.

Typical of the thoughtfulness is that shown by Jonathan Rinehart, who has his own communications firm. When he has a party in his duplex he has someone in to put the place to rights before Sadie Dupree, his regular cleaning woman, arrives.

And when Rubén de Saavedra, an interior designer with his own firm, learned that Eliani Rubi, who keeps his rather elaborate place shining, was to be photographed, he sent her out to have her hair done. Also when he's going to entertain he tells Mrs. Rubi to do nothing the day before but wash the china, some of it heirloom, so that she can do it leisurely and not be nervous about it.

Dr. George Clahr, an ophthalmologist, says that great as Doris Cook is, she has a rather high accident rate with glassware and so he quietly washes his good crystal and puts it away, hoping she won't notice.

While the men are showing consideration, the women are usually becoming more and more identified with their employers until, in no time at all, they are saying "we." Maggie Godfrey says that she and Nathan Miller, a real estate developer, "act like brother and sister." Sometimes there is a little motherliness too. Conrad Sterrett, a first vice president with Shearson Hayden Stone Inc., investment bankers, has grown accustomed to having Vernette Washington address him by his first name.

Mr. Sterrett says that he leads a rather Spartan existence and entertains seldom. But once when he did give a small buffet supper and he and his guests were in the midst of enjoying the food that Miss Washington had prepared, she called up and said, "Hi, Conrad, how are things going?"

There was the night he came home to find the living room filled with plants. "Vernette had bought them; she thought the place looked too bare," he said. "And she buys cleaning supplies and other things for the apartment, then I have a hard time paying her back; she doesn't want to take the money."

All of the women said the men never keep track of the time spent on their apartments and don't fret if the women are not busy every second. Maggie Godfrey said of bachelors, "They like things clean but they leave you alone." Sadie Dupree said that Mr. Rinehart told her he didn't care what hours she put in, "Just so I kept the place looking nice."

This relaxed attitude of the men toward time gives the women a sense of responsibility and a feeling of independence that inspires them to take a proprietary interest in the places where they work.

Insistent About Curtains

Vernette Washington had not seen Mr. Sterrett since Christmas until a few days ago and on that occasion she said, "Conrad, I think we better wash these living room curtains." Mr. Sterrett said he didn't think the curtains needed washing, but it soon became plain that the curtains were going to get it.

Eliani Rubi says of Rubén de Saavedra's place, "I feel toward his apartment as I do my own house. Everything I do for him is as I would do it for myself." Perhaps because Mrs. Rubi is from a country where traditions call for a more personal approach—she is from Argentina and speaks very little English—she tries to look after Mr. de Saavedra as well as his apartment. "One time she got all excited," he said, as she listened intently, "because she discovered I was out of shampoo." Mrs. Rubi beamed at him.

Mr. de Saavedra has learned that his apartment is cleaned almost in the dark. Mrs. Rubi wants to save on his electricity bill although he has explained to her that electricity is included in his rent. "I guess she can't believe that," he said.

But perhaps what really distinguishes the relationship between these men and women is the tolerance that lets them be amused in the nicest kind of way by each other.

Vernette Washington said with a smile that Mr. Sterrett had told her in the begining that he hated to wash dishes. "And he sure meant it," she said. "He rinses them off good but he does let them pile up and, since I come to his place only once every two weeks, there are a lot of them."

She chuckled as she added, "Sometimes they reach almost to the front door." Then, visualizing this scene, she went into gales of laughter before she finally shook her head and said fondly, "That Conrad!"

Suga, hairdresser extraordinaire, and his staff
are now in residence at Bergdorf's.
Suga, this extraordinary young man who thinks women wonderful, who creates a totally individual look — for each and every one, who believes that every woman can look younger,
darling of fashion models and famous women
yet passionately interested in the challenge of making every woman more beautiful.
We at Bergdorf's welcome Suga
for his charm, his talent,
his unabashed likability and we hope you'll have the pleasure of meeting him and his staff in their beautiful new salon overlooking the Park.
Suga will, of course,
be coming to Bergdorf's
in White Plains.
Do watch for our special announcement of the date.
Call his special number, PL3-9500

Future Social Events

Givenchy in Person

April 28—Supporters of the Hospital for Special Surgery think nothing of jetting in from Europe and the West Coast for the annual spring benefit. Hubert de Givenchy himself will fly in from Paris, bringing representative pieces from his unisex couture collection, to be shown at the luncheon in the Grand Ballroom at the Waldorf-Astoria. Mrs. Edwin I. Hilson is chairman. Tickets, $75.

Fashion at Lunch

April 26—Fashion show and decorations by Gucci will add a fillip to the Girls Club of New York's annual benefit luncheon in the Plaza's Grand Ballroom. Helen Hayes will present prizes to six club members selected for outstanding achievement. Mrs. Robert G. Wilson is chairman. Tickets, $24.

Turn Back the Clock

April 28 — Antiquities from the Middle East, flower prints by P. J. Redouté and animal bronzes are among the 100 works of art to be auctioned at a dinner at the St. Regis-Sheraton Roof for the Holy Land Conservation Fund. The auctioneers will be Edwin Weisl Jr., former city Administrator of Parks, Recreation and Cultural Affairs, and Roger Caras, president of the nonprofit agency whose purpose is the preservation and restoration of the natural environment, animals and plant life of the Holy Land as it was in Biblical times. Tickets, $35.

Say It With Flowers

April 29—The motif will be floral for the Industrial Home for the Blind's Iris Ball at the Pierre. Hanging baskets of flowers will adorn the ballroom, and committee members will flutter around like so many blossoms in designer gowns representing different flowers. Aline Franzen, co-chairman with Telly Savalas, has chosen the iris; Francesca Lodge, the lilac and Monique Van Vooren, the black narcissus. The menu won't offer crystallized violets, but there will be mousse de saumon à la rose and, to wind up the repast, café noir à la tulipe. Richard Burton will receive the home's 1976 Humanitarian Award. Tickets, $150 per couple.

Art from Across the River

April 29 to May 29—Manhattanites will be able to see what Brooklyn has to offer in the way of art without stirring off home turf thanks to the exhibition "Masterpieces of American Painting from the Brooklyn Museum," at the Davis & Long Company, 746 Madison Avenue. The showing of 42 oils and watercolors by such artists as John Singleton Copley and Winslow Homer begins Thursday with a champagne preview at $25 a head from 8 P.M. to midnight. Many patrons will, like Jacqueline Onassis, the honorary chairman, drop in after private dinner parties. The public will be admitted thereafter, Tuesday through Saturday from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. at a charge of $1.50 (adults) or 75 cents (students.) All proceeds will go to the museum. Mrs. Jack Berkman is chairman.

Going, Going, Gone

May 1—Like the idea of 10 days in a villa at Runaway Bay, Jamaica: a pair of Coalport porcelain vases dating to 1820; lunch with Pelé, the soccer star, for two children plus four season tickets to the Cosmos games? Put in your bid for these and other treasures at the third annual dinner dance-auction at the hill campus of the Riverdale Country School. The 1975 event raised $38,000 for the school. The auctioneer, Bill Doyle; the caterer, Robert Day, and the band-leader, Gus Kamaras, are professionals, but other details, like the cloakroom, will be handled by volunteers, many of them students. Mrs. Lawrence Loventhal is chairman. Tickets, $40 per couple.

Anniversary Ball

May 1 — The New York Junior League celebrates its 75th anniversary with a gala ball at the Metropolitan Club honoring the five outstanding volunteers of the year—Mrs. Mohamed Shahenshah, Mrs. Terry Bevis, Mrs. Mortimer L. Curran, Patricia Jones and Mrs. Byron T. Foster—and past league presidents. Some 500 members and guests will be on hand for dinner, while juniors (league parlance for those under 30) will swell the ranks later for dancing in the club's Great Hall. Proceeds to the league's Community Services Trust Fund. Mrs. Julian H. Robertson is chairman. By invitation only.

A Golden Occasion

May 1 — Forty-first annual dinner and ball of the Kosciuszko Foundation in the Grand Ballroom at the Waldorf-Astoria will salute the foundation's golden anniversary and raise funds for its scholarship program. A midnight pageant will present Polish folk dances and four debutants of Polish descent. Debutantes of years gone by will also be honored. Dr. Walter Golaski is chairman. Tickets, $35.

Cocktails for a Cause

May 3—The Harlem Hospital Center Auxiliary holds its annual fund-raising cocktail party in the Belvedere Suite at the Rainbow Room. Proceeds from this year's event with music by Buddy Walker's orchestra. and entertainment by John Rainbow, concert baritone, and Howard Porter, who has appeared as the Tinman in "The Wiz," will go toward purchase of a dialysis machine. Tickets, $17.50, from Doris Pollard, chairman, at 311 West 24th Street.

Photorealism at Dinner

May 3—A highlight of the 13th annual WAIF Leadership Conference will be "An Evening in SoHo," spring benefit of the charity's New York chapter. Guests may sip cocktails and nibble on hors d'oeuvres in the loft apartment of the painter Susan Meisel and her art dealer husband, Lawrence, at 141 Prince Street, then flock downstairs to Mr. Meisel's gallery for a seafood buffet and to dance and view the current show, seven enormous works by Audrey Flack, the photo-realist artist. The guest of honor will be Jane Russell, founder of WAIF. Tickets, $25.

Gathering of the Clan

May 3—Aloise Steiner Buckley, 80-year-old mother of James E. Buckley, the Senator, and William F. Buckley Jr., the columnist, will receive the first Barat Award, a gold medallion given by the Convent of the Sacred Heart, at a special dinner-dance in the Rainbow Room. The party will raise funds for the girls' school at One East 91st Street and mark the 175th anniversary of the founding of the teaching order of the Sacred Heart by St. Madeleine Barat. In addition to the honoree's eight sons and daughters, guests will include Governor Carey and former Mayor Robert F. Wagner as well as Dina Merrill and Cliff Robertson, whose daughter, Heather, attends the school. Joan Samsen is chairman. Tickets, $500 for benefactors: $200 for sponsors, and $50.

Award to William Paley

May 4 — The Skowhegan Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney Award, given each year by the Skowhegan School of Painting and Sculpture to a patron of the arts, goes this year to William S. Paley, chairman of CBS and of the Museum of Modern Art. Beatrice Straight, the actress, will make the presentation at the school's 30th anni*versary awards dinner* at the Plaza. The 1976 Skowhegan Medal will go to Willem de Kooning for painting, Dan Flavin for sculpture, Sol Lewitt for graphics and Saul Steinberg for drawing. Mrs. McCauley Conner is benefit chairman. Tickets are $100 from Frank H. Berend and Associates, 312 East 51st Street.

Gardeners Go Out on a Limb to Feed Old Elm Tree

"If they were able to take care of trees and knew anything about it," she said, "then there wouldn't be any need for volunteers."

Martin Lang, the Commissioner of Parks, however, said that he was "now in the role of a humble suppliant" for volunteer help.

When contacted by telephone, Mr. Lang said he was working on a pamphlet for mass distribution about the care of street trees. He added that, "far from turning off people, we've been sitting here with this pamphlet to tell people, 'Hey, you better take care of your trees.'"

He said that he was not familiar with the specifics of Mrs. Graff's case and that it was possible that "some misguided official at a lower level may not have guided this incident with the proper finesse."

Meanwhile in the park, under the threat of a shower, the corps of gardeners began digging into the earth, putting fertilizer between the cobblestones of the sidewalk surrounding the tree.

The tree, sandwiched between a 30-foot drop in the park on one side and a subway tunnel that runs under Central Park West on the other, is limited to the nourishment it gets "from the wall it stands on," said Mrs. Graff, explaining the reason for the fertilizing.

Hildy Parks, (Mrs. Alexander H. Cohen), another of the volunteer gardeners, told why she had come to help with the work. "We used to have a house in the country, but we never got to use it, so we sold it and now I miss it," she said.

CAREY APPOINTS A LIBRARY PANEL

Study Group to Be Headed by Edwin Newman

By IVER PETERSON
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, April 24—Governor Carey has named a 24-member commission to draw up the agenda for a meeting next April that will set priorities for libraries across the state.

The commission, with Edwin Newman, the NBC television commentator as its chairman and Gwen Verdon, the actress, as one of its members, was described as a "planning" group to "determine major issues and prepare guidelines and directions for the conference," which will "study the future of libraries in the coming decade."

Other members of the commission include Assembly Speaker Stanley Steingut, Democrat of Brooklyn; Alfred A. Giardino, chairman of the City's Board of Higher Education, and Edward B. Nyquist, State Education Commissioner.

The members will neither be paid nor receive compensation for expenses, according to the Governor's office.

Other Commission Members

Other members of the commission are:

Dr. Lansing Baker of Buffalo, school superintendent.
Murray Bob of Jamestown, president, New York Library Association.
Mamie Clark of Hastings-on-Hudson, day-care center executive.
Richard Couper of New York City, president, New York Library Association.
John Diebold of New York City, management consultant.
Edward Duffy of Buffalo, bank president.
Glyn Evans of Albany, director of libraries, State University.
Arthur Frear of Kingston, student at State University in New Paltz.
Emlyn Griffith of Rome, member, State Board of Regents.
Harold Kalikow of New York City, contractor.
Dr. Seymour Lachman, professor, City University.
State Senator Edwyn E. Mason, Republican-Conservative of Hobart.
Frederick Maxonif Oswego, high school principal.

The Major Events of the Day—Section 1

International

Despite the chilly relations between Hanoi and Washington, several American oil companies have been quietly invited by Vietnam to submit proposals for resuming the offshore oil exploration that was suspended when South Vietnam fell to Communist forces a year ago. American companies and concerns in Canada, France, Japan and Britain have held continuous secret negotiations with the Vietnamese and appear eager to resume drilling for oil in the potentially rich South China Sea. Information on the negotiations was provided by oil executives who wished to remain anonymous and by State Department officials. [Page 1, Column 8.]

While strictly enforcing controls on American sales of military equipment to China, the Ford Administration has quietly acquiesced to some European sales to China and to negotiations on future sales. Senior Administration officials said that to facilitate these sales, France and Britain has been allowed to bypass the allied control mechanism to review all proposed sales of strategic items to Communist countries. They said this did not constitute a policy decision but rather a disposition to send a positive signal to China without provoking the Soviet Union. [1:6-7.]

After stalling for two weeks, President Suleiman Franjieh of Lebanon signed a constitutional amendment that will permit Parliament to select a new head of state. He had been under intense pressure from Syria, the Lebanese left and his own allies in the Phalangist Party. He signed apparently only after his Phalangist allies threatened to break with him. Kamal al-Assad, Speaker of Parliament, called a meeting for Monday to fix a date to choose a new president, but there is nothing in the constitutional amendment that will oblige Mr. Franjieh to quit before his six-year term expires on Sept. 23. [1:6-7.]

Portugal's new Constitution providing for "democracy and socialism" became effective at midnight last night and the election today for the 263-seat National Assembly follows two years to the day the revolution that ended 48 years of dictatorship. The vote is not likely to be decisive for two reasons: The prospects are for a division of votes that will give the Socialists only a plurality over three other major parties, and a new president will be chosen in two months. But the vote is expected to confirm the general rejection of the Communists' effort to take power and what President Francisco da Costa Gomes said was the "consolidation of pluralist democracy." [1:7-8.]

National

Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, who has said for months that he had no intention of entering any primaries, also said that he would not enter the New Jersey primary on June 8, the last one open to him, regardless of the outcome of the Pennsylvania primary on Tuesday. In recent days, a number of his associates had been urging him to change his mind. Some had told reporters that if Jimmy Carter were stopped in Pennsylvania by the coalition to which Mr. Humphrey has given tacit support, Mr. Humphrey might well decide to run in New Jersey. [1:2-3.]

The precipitous enrollment decline that threatened the existence of this country's Roman Catholic parochial schools has eased. They are attracting new students by emphasizing spiritual and moral values that many parents find lacking in public schools. There are now waiting lists at some Roman Catholic schools, particularly at the secondary level, and there is growing sentiment for lifting moratoriums on school construction that many dioceses imposed in the days of decline. "It's no longer a question of whether we are going to be able to save the schools, but what we are going to do to improve them," said the Rev. John F. Meyers, president of the National Catholic Educational Association. [1:4.]

"Go into business for yourself" is increasingly a theme in the women's-rights movement. Many are going into business rather than risk a long wait for advancement in the corporate world. They have overcome a reluctance to seek bank loans for capital, and loan funds have become more readily available. Examples of the expanding frontier are numerous. [1:2-3.]

> QUOTATION OF THE DAY: "The continuing gullibility of the bank, the advance of yet more and more money by the way of loans and overdrafts . . . is beyond my comprehension."—Acting State Supreme Court Justice Harry T. Nusbaum, speaking of Munroe Schwebel, a reputed confidence man who found a friend and $732,000 at Chase Manhattan. [1:5.]

Metropolitan

Against the opposition of Conservation Commissioner Ogden R. Reid, the General Electric Company has reportedly offered to pay New York State at least $2 million to settle the controversial PCB's case, provided the payment is not cited as a penalty and that the company is not required to make "restoration, reclamation or other like remedy" because of its discharge of the toxic chemical into the Hudson River. The company also insists that the state sign a "good-faith clause" in which the state would say that General Electric "acted in good faith, unintentionally, and in reliance upon its [Federal pollution discharge] permit." The PCB's case involves the discharge of polychlorinated biphenyls. Mr. Reid's view of the company's offer has made him the renewed center of controversy, further straining his relations with Governor Carey. [1:1.]

In repeated visits to the Rockefeller Center branch of the Chase Manhattan Bank in a two-year period that began in January 1970, the late Munroe Schwebel got more than $732,000 in unsecured loans and overdrafts, just for the asking. Mr. Schwebel had said he was in the public relations business, but as a recent trial in State Supreme Court in Manhattan progressed he appeared to be an astute confidence man. Even though he had not given Chase Manhattan any security, the bank did not run a credit check on him. The bank even lost its claim to a collection of Chinese paintings that Mr. Schwebel had finally offered as collateral. The court case was about this claim. [1:5.]

School Chancellor Irving Anker has agreed to remove a personal trustee and security guards he had sent to enforce the policy of a shortened school day at a defiant West Side school district. He said, however, continued resistance might lead to legal action. He denied that the removal of the guards and trustee implied he was backing away from enforcing the 2:15 P.M. early dismissal time, which was imposed to save money, and said that "our past experience has been that after a cooling-off period, people may see the need to adhere to a policy and will avoid confrontation." [21:1.]

Port Urged To Change Financing

By WERNER BAMBERGER

The Port of New York and all other major United States harbors, a study finds, must abandon traditional methods of financing new port projects and begin to rely more on legislative appropriations than on bond issues amortized through rental fees of facilities.

Port Notes

This view was expressed in a 246-page study, "Port Development in the United States," made available last week by the National Research Council. The study estimated that total new capital expenditures for port development during the next few years would be more than $375 million annually.

This sum would provide $300 million a year for the construction of publicly owned marine terminals and $75 million a year for the construction of new deep-draft channels, anchorages and harbor works.

In addition, the study estimated that the Federal Government would spend about $150 million a year on traditional and experimental aids to navigation, removal of obstructions and maintenance dredging.

In the past, it was noted, financing of commercial marine terminal construction was almost exclusively the responsibility of local port agencies.

These agencies, the report noted, are now meeting financial difficulties common to all large urban centers and—as a result of higher priorities for education, welfare, housing and other public services—funds for port development receive low priorities.

It appears unlikely, the study continued, that local sources will be able or willing to finance needed port development during the next decade.

Although the present system of local financing has worked well, the study said, the time has come for United States ports to be included among the recipients of financial aid programs in line with the national policy of revenue sharing.

A tentative step in this direction has already been taken as the result of some $150 million in grants for port development work by the Economic Development Administration. However, the Port of New York has not received any of this money for improving harbor facilities here.

The era of wooden ships and iron men, which started for Lloyd's Register of Shipping a little more than 200 years ago, has officially come to an end.

The British ship classification society announced recently that it had withdrawn its rules for building wood and composite vessels. Composite ships, which included China clippers, were made of wooden planking over iron ribs or frames. Originally their bottoms were clad with copper or a copper-alloy sheathing.

When the new practice went into effect several weeks ago, Lloyd's Register still listed one composite ship, dating back to the 1850-70 period, as well as 15 wooden merchant ships.

However, the American Bureau of Shipping, another leading international ship classification society, said last week that it would continue to classify such vessels.

The Cunard Line has taken a step back into time and is reintroducing its traditional stack markings—red stacks topped by a black stripe—for its two new cruise ships, the Cunard Countess and the Cunard Princess.

The line's flagship, the 66,000-ton Queen Elizabeth 2, which entered service in 1969, sports a modernistic single funnel painted white with red flashing around the base.

The traditional funnel colors were first used in 1840 when the company began regular trans-Atlantic service.

The first of the two new cruise ships, the 750-passenger Countess, will make her debut with a seven-day Caribbean cruise from San Juan, P.R., on Aug. 14.

Six New Members Elected To Freedom House Board

The election of six new members to the board of trustees of Freedom House was announced yesterday by former Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine, who has been re-elected chairman of the board.

The new members are Sol C. Chaikin, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union; Sydney Gruson, senior vice president of The New York Times; Rita E. Hauser, lawyer; Nathaniel R. Jones, general counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Bess Myerson, columnist, and Norman Redlich, dean of the New York University Law School.

The organization seeks to strengthen free institutions in the United States and abroad.

Hal Prince's Rx for 'Rex'

BOSTON

"Rex," the Richard Rodgers-Sheldon Harnick musical about Henry VIII which opens tonight at the Lunt-Fontanne, sailed into the port of Boston a month ago. The new show was laden with more treasure than the flagship of Sir Francis Drake off the Spanish Main: golden tapestries, a king's ransom in velvet and lace, a gilded throne and a seasoned crew that had seen these particular waters many times before.

It was one Broadway-bound musical that seemed to have it all. "Rex" had the melodies of Richard Rodgers, lyrics by Sheldon Harnick ("Fiddler on the Roof"), a book by Sherman Yellen ("The Rothschilds"), a star, Nicol Williamson, acknowledged to be one of the better actors of his generation, and, for a setting, the colorful panoply of Tudor England.

Yet when it arrived in Boston, "Rex" seemed to be foundering. There were rumors of trouble with the show's book and with its star. Williamson, it was said, might walk out at any time. The Boston Globe's Kevin Kelly said "Rex" lacked "impact" and complained of a "now-you-see-them-now-you-don't" shuffle of Henry's wives.

"Rex," it seemed, was suffering from lumbago in its first act. Part of the problem was the sheer time span it had to cover, since the show opens with Henry married to his first wife, Katharine of Aragon, and ends with his death nearly 30 years and five wives—later. Still, there was healthy optimism in the "Rex" encampment. Richard Adler, the show's producer (and the composer of "The Pajama Game" and "Damn Yankees") was certain all the ingredients were there for a smash. "Look," he said, shortly after "Rex" settled into its Boston engagement, "this show has a cough, it hasn't got cancer."

But Adler was taking no chances. He had called in Harold Prince, one of the

The Man Who Films Bergman's Nightmares

By DAVID DENBY

Great movie cameramen must work in a peculiarly schizophrenic manner. Formidably creative in their own right, they can fulfill themselves only by serving the vision of a strong director, without whose ideas and leadership they remain expert technicians turning out meaningless pretty pictures. They must be decisive and intuitively "right" about questions of composition, light, color, and a hundred other things, yet flexible enough to put up with the vagaries of whatever man or woman they are working for. How many first-rate artists have the temperament to function this way?

Among the finest cameramen of today perhaps none has achieved as much or honored another's obsessions as selflessly as Sven Nykvist. Nykvist, 53, has shot over 40 films, directed two features of his own as well as numerous documentaries, and worked with such famous directors as Louis Malle and Roman Polanski, but all over the world he is known simply as "Bergman's cameraman." In 1953, he was one of three cameramen on Bergman's "The Naked Night"; five years later he was solo cameraman on "The Virgin Spring" and has shot all 16 of Bergman's films since then, including such forceful works as "Winter Light," "Persona," "Shame," "The Passion of Anna," "Cries and Whispers," "Scenes From a Marriage," "The Magic Flute" and "Face to Face," which recently opened here to high praise from the critics.

Nykvist, a large, handsome, friendly man with reddish-silver hair and beard and a rounded baritone voice, was in New York a few days ago, discoursing happily on his art, his career, and his relationship with the great director. And as we talked, Bergman's recent nightmarish encounter with the Swedish tax authorities overshadowed our conversation. Although criminal charges against the director had been dropped, he was so emotionally upset that he fled to his island retreat in the Baltic and cancelled his next two films.

Bergman once described Nykvist as a "tough" personality, one he could not succeed in dominating. When I quoted this to Nykvist, he laughed, "Oh no, he is definitely the stronger man, and I am the weaker; we've fought very little in recent years simply because we now understand each other so well. Also, as I've gotten older I've become less interested in the prestige of winning arguments. You know, if the director doesn't have the support of his cameraman he's eamers," the new David Rabe play opened at the Newhouse Theater last has been accused of trying to out-le Grand Guignol. The experience is new one for Rabe, whose 1972 play, and Bones," ended with the bloody e suicide of a blinded Vietnam veteran. But "Streamers" is something of a departure for its director, Mike Nichols, whose reputation was built on mirth, not mayhem. Both Rabe and Nichols discussed the play and its meaning in a series of recent interviews.

To begin with, "Streamers" is set in an army barracks in Virginia in 1965. The threat of Vietnam hangs in the air as three enlisted men worry about combat, joke about army life, cope with two drunken but

The Dying Speak For Themselves On a TV Special

By DAVID DEMPSEY

"Death is death only for the living," the German philosopher Ludwig Feuerbach wrote more than a hundred years ago. This Thursday evening at 10 on Channel 13, three terminally ill patients and the widow of a fourth document this maxim in an hour-and-a-half Public Broadcasting System film special, "Dying," directed by Michael Roemer under a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities. Previous television specials, on PBS and the commercial networks, have handled this topic gingerly and didactically—death as something to be talked about but not seen. In this production, the dying speak for themselves; all had willingly agreed to this invasion of privacy, and, indeed, we are invited to share the final few months of their lives as they wait for the end. How they wait, of course, is the film's message. Television thus becomes a medium for dying in public, the patient an "actor" in a drama for which he is writing the script and the program a Rorschach test for the viewer — a kind of death and configuration from which everyone can extract his own meaning.

Roemer and his crew lived with these doomed people off and on over a period of two years to achieve the cinéma vérité we see here. And in the sense that he focuses on the style and qualities with which his subjects struggle to maintain their integrity under the hammer blows of physical deterioration, the film is really about living rather than dying. A young widow explains how she and her husband spent their last weeks together trying to rationalize the irrational with a stiff upper lip, a dry eye, a party at the bedside and plans for donating the body to medical science. In poignant contrast, a hospitalized woman in her early 40's announces—almost cheerfully —"I have cancer of the brain. It grows just like moss. There is absolutely nothing that can be done," although it is apparent that much has been attempted. Toward the end, she is cared for by her elderly mother and, in a rare study in shared grief, the two women suc-

KNOCK KNOCK—Jules Feiffer's funny new American play about two retired friends, philosophical types like their author, who are visited by Joan of Arc. "One can scarcely speak of a flaw in a piece so irrepressibly cavalier." (Kerr) Directed by Marshall W. Mason. With Daniel Seltzer, Leonard Frey, Nancy Snyder. Biltmore, 261 W. 47th St. (JU 2-5340)

THE LADY FROM THE SEA—Vanessa Redgrave stars in Ibsen's drama about a woman involved in a loveless marriage with a widowed physician and her conflict when a seafarer, to whom she was once pledged, returns to claim her. Directed by Tony Richardson. Clive Barnes: "The manner in which Miss Redgrave plots that course is masterly . . . What a lovely play this is! Sea-green, passionate, but quiet." Walter Kerr: "Able as most of the players are, they seem terrified of giving the play resonance or variety or defined color," and "The play's content could have been thrashed out in an Ibsen livingroom, without driftwood bowers, to serve as mermaids' thrones." Circle in the Square, 1633 Bway. (581-0720)

THE MAGIC SHOW—A show set in a little nightclub in Passaic, N.J., centering around an illusionist entertainer. Walter Kerr wrote that "the show is the kind that parents will take children to . . . but they go for their own fun, really." Joseph Abaldo stars. Cort, 138 W. 48th St. (489-6392)

ME AND BESSIE—Linda Hopkins in the rags-to-riches-to-rags story of Bessie Smith. Clive Barnes thought that "a considerable effort has been made to give it the shape and substance of a genuine theatrical evening." Walter Kerr found that "while most of the songs are Bessie's, it is Miss Hopkins who is there on stage, assertive and smiling and unmistakably her own woman." Conceived by Will Holt and Miss Hopkins. Directed by Robert Greenwald. Edison, 240 W. 47th St. (PL 7-7164)

MONTY PYTHON LIVE!—The original Monty Python group of British comedians. "The humor is occasionally raunchy, but for sheer irreverence, impertinence and spaced-out zaniness there has been nothing to beat it since Genghis Khan." (Barnes) City Center, 131 W. 55th St. (489-6810) Closes next Sun.

MY FAIR LADY—Ian Richardson, Christine Andreas, George Rose and Robert Coote in the 20th-anniversary production of the Alan Jay Lerner/Frederick Loewe musical, based on George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion." Directed by Jerry Adler. "It proves 20 years stronger, a show so dazzlingly melodic and visually rich in its first act that it scarcely needs a second—and so emotionally binding in its second that you wonder why you were merely dazzled by the first." (Kerr) St. James, 246 W. 44th St. (OX 5-5858)

THE NORMAN CONQUESTS—A trilogy of three comedies by Alan Ayckbourn which are performed on separate evenings and plot the comic adventures of three couples on a weekend in the English countryside. Richard Benjamin, Paula Prentiss, Don Murray, Estelle Parsons, Barry Nelson and Carole Shelley star. In Walter Kerr's words, (Clive Barnes was in accord), "All three plays are very, very funny." Directed by Eric Thompson. Morosco, 217 W. 45th St. (CI 6-6230)

PACIFIC OVERTURES—A musical documentary which deals with the Westernization of Japan, from the arrival of Commodore Perry to the present. Music and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim, book by John Weidman, directed by Harold Prince. "There are generic and stylistic discrepancies in the musical that are not easily overlooked—but the attempt is so bold and the achievement so fascinating, that its obvious faults demand to be overlooked." (Barnes) Walter Kerr remarked, on the other hand, "The occasion is essentially doll and immobile because we are never properly placed in it, drawn neither East nor West, given no specific emotional or cultural bearings." Winter Garden, 1634 Bway. (CI 5-4878)

PIPPIN—A musical about Charlemagne's son (Pepin). Music and lyrics by Stephen Schwartz; directed and choreographed by Bob Fosse. "What will certainly be memorable is the staging by Bob Fosse . . . it takes a painfully ordinary little show and launches it into space. This is fantastic." (Barnes) Imperial, 249 W. 45th St. (CO 5-2412)

THE ROYAL FAMILY—A revival of the George S. Kaufman/Edna Ferber play, which is set in New York in 1927 and concerns a flamboyant theatrical family. Rosemary Harris, Eva LeGallienne, Sam Levene and Ellis Rabb star. Mr. Rabb is the director. "The play's deep involvement with the stage as stage is made persuasively emphatic, and the performances lock into its little paean of praise immaculately." (Kerr) Helen Hayes, 210 W. 46th St. (CI 6-6380)

TWO EVENTS OF NOTE — Choreographer Laura Dean presents dance in which ordinary movements (stamping, hopping, spinning) are given a repetitive structure. Dance critic Robert J. Pierce wrote recently in The Times that Miss Dean takes the elements of space, time, energy, human bodies, and recasts them "in ways that challenge our principles and esthetics." Her company opens a mini engagement on Thursday at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. "Song," for which Miss Dean composed the music, will have its New York première.

This week also ushers in a Monday-evening series of rarely seen dance films, at the Preview Theater. Tomorrow the Kirov Ballet's 1964 color version of "The Sleeping Beauty" will be shown. Thereafter, films grouped under the categories of Early Americana, European Ballet, Russian-Ballet and The German Influence will be presented. There is a discount on the complete series of five (for information, call the American Dance Guild at 245-4833).

JAZZ DAZZLE—This week New York will reverberate with the performances of jazz greats. Thursday has been declared Duke Ellington orchestra, conducted by and Mayor Beame, an occasion that will be celebrated at the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine, in a concert with the Duke Ellington Orchestra, conducted by Mercer Ellington and featuring singers Sarah Vaughan and Joe Williams, and the Hampton Choir. Ellington's "Liberian Suite" will be played in full for the first time since its première at Carnegie Hall in 1947.

On Friday, Carnegie Hall will present a rare New York concert by Ray Charles, the spokesman—on piano, organ and sax—of blues and gospel soul music. The Raelettes will accompany.

And on Saturday, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie and tenor saxophonist Joe Farrell will give two benefit performances in an attempt to raise funds for low-income housing.

BORGES READING—Jorge Luis Borges, the renowned Latin American writer, now on a visit to this country, will be present at a reading of his work on Thursday at the 92d Street Y. The selection of poems and short stories will be read in Spanish by Emir Rodrigues Monegal, professor of Spanish and Latin American literature at Yale, and in English by poets Richard Howard and W. S. Merwin (Borges, who is almost totally blind, will provide introductions and commentary throughout the program).

SOHO HOPPING—This time of year, SoHo, with its art galleries, showplaces, boutiques and restaurants, becomes a daily street fair. Tom Brink, who exhibited paintings in the 50's, went into Happenings in the 60's and is now toying with filmmaking, is escorting whoever shows up at Free Space Alternate U (339 Lafayette St., at Bleecker), on Saturdays at 2:30, for an afternoon jaunt, gratis, through the neighborhood. Mr. Brink likes to zero in on more advanced art forms—Conceptual art, installations and video work, performance art—and calls his excursions "SoHo Art Through Anarchist Eyes."

SAME TIME, NEXT YEAR — Bernard Slade's Broadway debut play about a man (Ted Bessell) and a woman (Loretta Swit) in a once-a-year monogamous adultery lasting from 1951 to 1975. "A neatly functional sentimental comedy thoroughly conscientious about getting a laugh every 40 to 60 seconds." (Kerr) Atkinson, 255 W. 47th St. (CI 5-3430)

SECRET SERVICE—William Gillette's Civil War spy thriller, last seen in New York in 1915, involving a gnash of villains, a clash of heroes and a flourish of heroines. Directed by Daniel Freudenberger, "at a certain distance, with a tongue-in-cheek awareness of theater-styles past," which "pays off handsomely." (Barnes) With John Lithgow, Charles Kimbrough, Meryl Streep. In repertory with the Phoenix Theater's "Boy Meets Girl." (Reviewed by Kerr in this issue.) Playhouse, 359 W. 48th St. (541-9820)

SHENANDOAH—A musical, set within the turmoil of the American Civil War, starring John Cullum. Directed by Philip Rose, music and lyrics by Gary Geld and Peter Udell. What the author-composers have done is "to seize upon the most commonplace of Saturday Evening Post covers, strip it of both the prettification and the mockery we've progressively applied to it, and offer it as the original bare bones of legend." (Kerr) Alvin, 250 W. 52d St. (PL 7-8646)

STREAMERS—David Rabe's play which is set in an Army barracks in Virginia in 1965. Directed by Mike Nichols. Newhouse, 150 W. 65th St. (EN 2-7616)

VERY GOOD EDDIE—A Guy Bolton/Jerome Kern musical involving a mixup among two honeymoon couples on a Hudson River dayboat. "Not having heard the numbers, and the numbers having been written by Jerome Kern, I was overwhelmed by their freshness." (Kerr) With Charles Repole and Virginia Seidel ("If he is as engaging as he is deft, Miss Seidel is period-adorable"). Directed by Bill Gile. Booth, 222 W. 45th St. (CI 6-5969)

WHO'S AFRAID OF VIRGINIA WOOLF?—Edward Albee's version of the American sexual nightmare, focusing on an aging history professor and his tipsy, sexy wife played by Ben Gazzara and Colleen Dewhurst. "The play stuns, and remains a stunning achievement, because its strength comes from actual pain, its demonic energy from real despair." (Kerr) Mr. Gazzara and Miss Dewhurst are "brilliant." Directed by Mr. Albee. Music Box, 239 W. 45th St. (CI 6-4636)

THE WIZ—The Tony-winning all-black musical version of "The Wizard of Oz," directed by Geoffrey Holder. "Everything is done confidently . . . it just doesn't have firm ground beneath it to say where it's come from: Kansas, Harlem, M-G-M, or a kiddies' matinee." (Kerr) Majestic, 247 W. 44th St. (CI 6-0730)

YENTL—An adaptation by Leah Napolin and Isaac Bashevis Singer of Mr. Singer's "Yentl, the Yeshiva Boy." While Clive Barnes stated that "the power of the play is very much in its evocation of a culture and a time," Walter Kerr commented, "An idea has been stubbornly, perversely pursued far beyond its usefulness to the play." Staged by Robert Kalfin. O'Neill, 230 W. 49th St. (CI 6-0220)

Now Previewing

LEGEND—Samuel Taylor's new romantic comedy of the West, starring Elizabeth Ashley, Gary Lockwood and George Dzundza. Directed by Robert Drivas. Barrymore, 243 W. 47th St. (CI 6-0390)

1600 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE — Ken Howard and Patricia Routledge in a new musical which deals with the American presidency, ranging from the administrations of George Washington to that of Theodore Roosevelt. Book and lyrics by Alan Jay Lerner. Music by Leonard Bernstein. Co-directed by Gilbert Moses and George Faison. Mark Hellinger, 51st St. and Bway. (PL 7-7064)

Off Broadway

(Many of the following productions are offered only on certain days of the week.)

BOY MEETS BOY—A musical comedy about the 30's, which is a homosexual spoof of the "boy meets girl" situation. With book by Bill Solly and Donald Ward, music and lyrics by Mr. Solly. Directed by Ron Troutman. "A feeble takeoff." (Gussow) Actors Playhouse, 100 Seventh Ave. (242-6657)

CAPRICE—Charles Ludlam's travesty of the world of fashion, starring Mr. Ludlam in the role of a mad doyen of dress designers. "On the whole, the new show lacks the spontaneity, soaring high spirits and yeasty buffoonery of his earlier efforts." (Gussow) Provincetown Playhouse, 133 MacDougal St. (730-9453)

THE CHERRY ORCHARD—Kim Hunter stars as Madame Ranevskaya in Chekhov's play. Directed by Robert Mandel. Roundabout Stage One, 333 W. 23d St. (924-7160)

CSC REPERTORY—In repertory: Anouilh's "Antigone," Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler," Arthur Conan Doyle's "The Hound of the Baskervilles" (adapted by Christopher Martin), Moliere's "Tartuffe," Harold Pinter's "The Homecoming" and Fernando De Rojas's "Celestina." "The progress CSC has made in the past few years is one of the most interesting and exciting aspects of the current New York theater." (Barnes) Abbey, 136 E. 13th St. (677-4210)

EDEN—Steve Carter's play about the confrontation, in 1927, between West Indian immigrants and Southern blacks living on New York's West Side. Directed by Edmund Cambridge. "Given a tantalizing, emotionally appealing performance by the Negro Ensemble Company," according to Walter Kerr. Mel Gussow noted, however, "But the play has serious motivational problems and an extremely questionable resolution." St. Marks Playhouse, 133 Second Ave. (OR 4-3530) Closes next Sun.

THE FANTASTICKS—Boy meets girl, boy loses girl, boy gets girl—which proceedings are accompanied by some unforgettable tunes. The Tom Jones-Harvey Schmidt creation is the longest-running show in American theater history. Sullivan Street Playhouse, 181 Sullivan St. (OR 4-3838)

GODSPELL — A musical ranging from operetta to salvation rock, based on the Gospel according to St. Matthew. Way back when, Walter Kerr said, "Why make St. Matthew dance? For the fun of it!" Promenade, Bway at 76th St. (799-7690)

HENRY V—The Royal Shakespeare Company production of Shakespeare's historical drama, with Alan Howard in the title role. Directed by Terry Hands. Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. (636-4100)

IN THE WINE TIME—Ed Bullins's 1968 drama about a black family living in urban America in the 50's. Directed by Robert Macbeth. Manhattan Theater Club, 321 E. 73d St. (288-2500)

LET MY PEOPLE COME — A musical which treats sex as nirvana with "an ingenuousness and adolescent giddiness." (Gussow) Earl Wilson Jr. is the author-composer. Village Gate, 160 Bleecker St. (473-7270)

MEDAL OF HONOR RAG—Tom Cole's play, based on an actual story, which is set in Valley Forge Army Hospital and involves the confrontation between a psychiatrist and a Vietnam veteran who won the Medal of Honor. Directed by David Chambers. With Howard E. Rollins Jr. and David Clennon. "It is a remarkably effective, strong and harrowing play." (Barnes) Theater De Lys, 121 Christopher St. (924-8782)

THE OLD GLORY—Poet Robert Lowell's trilogy of one-act plays, the first two, "Endecott and the Red Cross" and "My Kinsman, Major Molineux," taken from stories by Nathaniel Hawthorne, and the last, "Benito Cereno," adapted from the Herman Melville novella. Brian Murray staged the Hawthorne works and Austin Pendleton the Melville work. "The actors proved both efficient and elegant . . . but the poetry hung heavy in the miasma of cliche." (Barnes) American Place, 111 W. 46th St. (247-0393)

THE PRIMARY ENGLISH CLASS—Israel Horovitz's play which takes place at a primary English class, where a flustered and inexperienced English teacher (Jill Eikenberry) is trying to decline verbs in front of a veritable United Nations of pupils. "It is a slight play but an amusing one—a souffle with a clever recipe and a taste you will not forget in a hurry." (Barnes) Circle in the Square, 159 Bleecker St. (254-6330)

RICH AND FAMOUS—John Guare's wildly fantasticated, autobiographical satire whose hero, Bing Ringling, has written 844 plays, 843 of which have not been produced. A cast of dozens are all played by William Atherton, Ron Leibman and Anita Gillette. Directed by Mel Shapiro. "All three actors richly deserve to be seen, as does Mr. Guare's unusually frank apologia for a play." (Barnes) Newman/Public, 425 Lafayette St. (677-6350) Closes today.

TUSCALOOSA'S CALLING ME—"A breezily unpretentious, thoroughly engaging little revue," with "brisk and rippling and unabashedly fanciful songs." (Kerr) Music and lyrics by Hank Beebe and Bill Heyer, directed and staged by James Hammerstein and Sal Andrisano, with a cast of three. Chelsea Westside, 407 W. 43d St. (541-8394)

VANITIES—Jack Heifner's "diverting account, perhaps even a mildly honest account, of three girls on their long sad journey from cheerleaders at high school to sorority queens and finally to ladies wanly approaching the 30's with little more than their courage and their props to call their own." (Barnes) A joint venture of Robert Kalfin's Chelsea Theater, Playwrights Horizon, and the Lion Theater Company from Queens. Directed by Garland Wright. Chelsea Westside, 407 W. 43d St. (541-8394)

WOMEN BEHIND BARS—A comedy by Tom Eyen, with the underground superstar Divine. Directed by Ron Link. Truck and Warehouse, 79 E. 4th St. (777-0140)

WOYZECK — Georg Büchner's tragedy, found unfinished at his death in 1837, about a simpleton soldier who is cheated by fate, buffeted by fortune, led to murder and death. Presented by the Shaliko Company. Walter Kerr wrote, "It's all very neutral," but "guest-actor Joseph Chaikin in the central role is a decided bonus." Martinson/Public, 425 Lafayette St. (677-6350) Closes today.

Off Off Broadway

(Many of the following productions are offered only on certain days of the week.)

ACROBATICS—A play by Joyce Aaron and Luna Tarlo, about two old friends, both having recently ended affairs with men, who meet after a long absence. Directed by Miss Aaron. "The two women talk at, instead of to each other . . . it is as if two separate monologues are going on." (Gussow) Women's Interart Center, 549 W. 52d St. (246-6570) Closes today.

LAS ALAS DEL PEZ—Fernando Sanchez Mayans's portrayal of a young athlete. Directed by Carlos Bruno. In Spanish. Nuestro Teatro, 277 Park Ave. S. (673-9430) Closes today.

ALLEY CATS—Pat Daniel's portrayal of a man's tragic alcoholic downfall. Written and directed by Tom Coble. Wood, 128 E. 4th St. (228-7030).

BARGAININ' THING—A play written by Dan Owens and performed for the Eugene O'Neill Playwrights Conference. Directed by Harold Scott. Henry Street Settlement's New Federal Theater, 240 E. 3d St. (766-9334) Closes today.

CAN YOU SMELL GAS?—Linda Polan, British comedienne, in her one-woman show of songs, sketches and mime. Cherry Lane, 38 Commerce St. (YU 9-2020)

CASCANDO—A short radio play by Samuel Beckett, about the desperation of the creative process, the implausibility of making art. Staged by Jo Anne Akalaitis, presented by Mabou Mines. With music by Philip Glass. "See 'Cascando' and celebrate the creativity of one of the towering figures of Western art." (Gussow) 491 Bway. (989-4953) Closes next Sun.

CLEAN AS A WHISTLE—A comedy by Michael Norell and Richard Lenz about a young man who fears sex. Directed by Alfred Gingold. Presented by T. Schreiber Studio. Wonderhorse, 83 E. 4th St. (874-7509) Closes today.

JEAN COCTEAU REPERTORY—Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest," Samuel Beckett's "Endgame," Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," "The Count of Monte Cristo." Though Mel Gussow described aspects of "Count" as "amateurish," he added that the play "gradually accelerates until we are caught up by the sudden reversals, startling coincidences and derring-do." Bouwerie Lane, 330 Bowery. (677-0060)

COUPLING—Dennis Brite's play about two couples involved in emotional games. Directed by Albert B. Reyes. Nat Horne, 440 W. 42d St. (582-5713) Closes next Sun.

CROON—An ensemble creation of a new company called the Cutting Edge, concerned with the mother-daughter relationship. Directed by Andrea Balis. Mel Gussow described the work "perceptive" and the performances "engaging and clever." Performing Garage, 33 Wooster St. (966-3651)

A Murdered Melodrama and A Foiled Farce

Why not just call this Marybeth Hurt Week and let it go at that? Miss Hurt is the ingenue of the present Phoenix Theater company, and if anyone rises from the ashes of William Gillette's "Secret Service" and Bella and Sam Spewack's "Boy Meets Girl," it is she. could praise her for lots of things. She's cute as hell ringlets, whatever color wig she may be wearing on a evening, and she's as much at home swirling n Civil War hoop skirts as she is in fluffing out t red-and-white-checked commissary frills she affects ling a pregnancy she doesn't mind in the least, that she faints now and then) as a Hollywood s whose only ambition is to go to high school. to be contented and she'll sit back, smooth gingham around her, and virtually purr, giving ience what may be its only moment of sanity- g rest during the evening. Ask her to turn taking on meddlesome privates, lieutenants and ajor generals while she ties up a telegraph ong enough to let a spy get his work done and laze away as prettily as you please—and much angerously.

t all of this is merely cosmetic—it's easy for ingenues to be irresistible, provided they pertinent noses and very large eyes—and not at essence of the matter. What is good and right aiseworthy and endearing about Miss Hurt, lly in "Secret Service," is that, having been flirtatious and occasionally downright feather-brained nd belle to play, she plays her—coyness and and spunk and all—by believing in her. And nothing e more important than that, if an 1895 melodrama e with silhouettes creeping past blue window nd hands being shot away from the all-important set is to survive. For instance, author Gillette does ingenue as little more than a delaying tactic us wondering whether a spy will ever get his essage through, and to addle the wits of the Confederate War Department before the spy can hem further. She's a scene-fattener, that's what and a typical bit of business requires her to send a telegram of her own without permitting der to read it. It's a private matter, she explains but firmly. Think that's easy to play? Of it's not. Except that Miss Hurt has made it ting by persuading herself that just such a creature, sed of rather more spine than brain, could really uly exist. classiest "doctors" around, to treat "Rex's" ills. As director or producer, Prince has been involved with some of Broadway's splashiest musicals—"Fiddler on the Roof," "Cabaret," "West Side Story," to name a few. If Hal Prince couldn't cure the pain-in-the-Rex, who could?

The therapy had actually begun before Prince's arrival, during the show's engagements in Wilmington, Del., and Washington. The character of Henry had already changed considerably. Nicol Williamson had felt waves of hostility coming across the footlights: Why was this nasty man killing those nice ladies? He complained that the audience didn't understand Henry's desperate need for a male heir, his fear that without a strong king, England would plunge back into the civil strife of the Wars of the Roses. Scenes were rewritten, and then some members of the company complained that the revisions turned Henry into Mr. Nice Guy.

Queen Katharine had also undergone a sea change. At first, she was young and gorgeous and no one could figure out why Henry wanted to leave her. So she was turned into a dowdy housewife—who busied herself mending Henry's shirts. Unfortunately, that incarnation took the oomph out of her final confrontation with Henry.

The stage is set for Prince, who arrives on a cold Sunday in March, with the chill winds swirling the trash in eddies on the deserted street in front of Boston's Shubert Theater. While the cast rehearses onstage, Prince meets with members of the show's creative staff. He is no stranger to "Rex," having seen the show in Washington.

Prince tosses out ideas and suggestions. The blue silk tent that unfolds in the first act isn't coming out fast enough. In Washington there was a rippling effect, like a breeze. Can that be restored? The gold lamé nightgown on the doll that is supposed to be the baby Prince Edward is too gaudy; it has to go. A mat used for a scene in which Henry wrestles with the king of France looks like a piece of rubber. Prince suggests it be covered with a tapestry fabric to disguise its modernity. He is concerned about the scene in which Henry rages at his second wife, Anne Boleyn, who has just presented him with a daughter, Elizabeth. Henry's rejection of both baby and mother makes him seem too churlish, Prince says. Sherman Yellen agrees to rewrite the scene so that Henry, after his outburst on discovering he does not have a son, returns to Anne's room and tenderly cradles his baby daughter.

Yellen, who is writing under conditions reminiscent of the Tet offensive, talks about a new scene that will bring the very young Elizabeth onstage in the middle of a quarrel between Henry and Anne. That means a new child actress will be needed, and the casting will take valuable time. The New York opening has been postponed a few days, but time is short.

Someone remembers that a member of the chorus is traveling with her 5-year-old son, who has curly red hair and freckles and would make a perfect Elizabeth. But as it turns out, the boy—Sparky—is bidding to outdo Nicol Williamson in artistic temperament. He absolutely refuses to wear a dress. Richard Adler coaxes him; so does the director, Edwin Sherin. Sparky holds firm, happily sailing paper airplanes through the lobby. After tricky negotiation, a compromise is reached. Sparky will do the part wearing a nightgown. The word goes out to the cast. Nobody is to tell Sparky he looks "cute," let alone beautiful.

After his first rehearsal, Sparky gets a round of applause from the cast. Williamson gives him a wry look and says, "That's the part I must have."

In another meeting in the lounge, Prince talks about the new persona for Katharine of Aragon and her new costume. She is to be regal and pious, with a strength that comes from the certainty of being right in the eyes of God. "Simple, simple, simple, like a nun's habit. Not hanging loose, that looks just terrible. I just want her to look close to a literal nun. I could see against the white a big jet black cross. I think it's worth the trouble rushing in a new costume for the life it'll give."

By Tuesday, major changes are in the works for the first act, and the cast is rehearsing the new scenes whenever it can. Barbara Andres, slightly schizophrenic after all the changes in the character of Katharine, is onstage with Williamson, rehearsing the scene in which Henry asks her for a divorce so he can marry Anne Boleyn. She is working with Ed Sherin to find a way to play the scene. Sherin is in an awkward position. A show in which a "doctor" comes in is something like a ball game where a relief pitcher trots in from the bullpen—but the old pitcher doesn't leave the mound.

"You're getting into that frail woman thing," Sherin tells her. "But the fact is, you know you hold all the aces. You're strongest in the scene not when you're operating out of anger, but out of certainty. You believe Henry would rot in hell if he divorced you. It's inconceivable that he would do that. Don't look at him so much. Don't need him so much."

With the new characterization, Sherin says, Katharine's song comes as a surprise to the audience, which makes the scene more effective. Now, he says, the audience will think, "Look at the love she once had in her life, look at what she once felt."

> 'You don't know if Nicol Williamson is going to be nice to you or punch you in the mouth'

The song is, like most of the music Richard Rodgers writes, rich, melodic, romantic. Rodgers is keeping a close eye on things. At 74, his walk has been slowed by a stroke, but he works as hard as ever.

"He's amazing," says Penny Fuller, the actress who plays both Anne Boleyn and Elizabeth. "He writes a song, and if they don't like it, he goes up to his room and writes another one."

Rodgers watches the audience very carefully. "You can sense what the audience is up to. Are they silent when they go out, or do they seem happy to be where they are? Are they paying attention in the quiet scenes? If they are rustling, reading their programs in the middle of a scene, you know that scene is in trouble."

He thinks the feedback from "Rex" audiences is very good and getting better. "I remember," he says, sitting on a bench in the Shubert lobby, "when we opened 'South Pacific' in this theater. We knew we had a smash, but we kept working on it."

When he plays a new song for other members of the company, if they don't like it, they are silent. One doesn't, after all, say to Richard Rodgers, "That one doesn't hack it, Dick." Rodgers knows what the silences mean. So he goes to his room and writes another song. In the copyist's room in the Bradford Hotel the pile of music that has gone out of the show is higher than the music that stays. When a scene changes, a mood changes, and a song—no matter how lovely—no longer fits. A writer for Saturday Review saw the show in Wilmington and called one song, "The Pears of Anjou"—about getting old—Rodgers' finest work. The song vanished from the show in Boston.

Irwin Kostal, who is doing the orchestration for the show, has felt some pressure to play around with the Rodgers melodies, to make them sound more Elizabethan. When he first heard the songs, they were Broadway, not Tudor. In orchestrating them, he played a few tricks with tempo and pacing to get the flavor of the era. He was encouraged to do more. He took one song and gave it the full Tudor treatment. Then he put it back in his suitcase and locked it. "The name on that marquee is Richard Rodgers," he says. "If they want Elizabethan music they can go hire an Elizabethan."

By the middle of the week the show is undergoing major changes. Richard Adler says he can't remember any show that has been more thoroughly revamped on the road.

Hal Prince is working on more first act changes. He doesn't mince words about what he doesn't like but he is not stingy with praise. He tells Sherman Yellen that one new scene "loses me on the first line" but the ending, he says, is "marvelous, absolutely marvelous!" Sheldon Harnick is working on lyrics for a new song for Henry. As the matinee audience files in, Prince and Harnick perch on a pair of theater seats and discuss the lyrics. Prince likes the idea, but thinks it is too prayerful, especially a line that asks, "Haven't I obeyed your laws, God?"

"That disturbs me," says Prince. "The man I see on that stage has been a breaker of rules — he's switched churches, taken women at will."

Harnick explains that the real Henry always believed in his righteousness.

"That may have been true in real life, but not on that stage. I'm seeing him as a member of the audience and I see him as a breaker," Prince responds.

Prince goes on, "It isn't that I don't like the lyric; you know I wouldn't fool around with you. I just think at this spot it may not be appropriate. Tell you what. Let's go to Josephs and get something to eat. And let's yap at each other, the way we used to. Let's talk it out."

Sherman Yellen finds Prince, "a marvelous catalyst for me." He takes the changes in stride. "I don't mind the harshest cut as long as it's just and intelligent."

One of his problems is making Tudor reality palatable for modern audiences. "It's hard to make their behavior seem rational. What seems cruel to us was reasonable to the Tudors." He has read the last statements of people executed by Henry. They did not find his sentence unjust. "They had broken the rule of their world by offending the monarch and they knew the consequences." The play, he says, "moves from scatology to grief very sharply. That's the kind of world it was. Cruelty next to laughter."

The actors who will recreate this world are being coaxed through grueling days of rehearsals by Ed Sherin. "I'm surprised it's working as well as it is, with so many personalities under such great strain," Sherin says. Friends have called him from New York, saying, "Gee, I'm sorry you're not directing the show anymore."

"The rumors in New York were that Prince was going to take over direction, but I wouldn't permit that. He's managed to make it very easy for me to work with him. He has been very smart in a tough situation."

Often, the actors are rehearsing the new scenes during the day and performing the old ones at night. "The actors can't act viscerally if they can't remember their lines," Sherin laments. "It's mindboggling. It's the hardest work I've ever done in my life. I was under fire in Korea and that was simple compared to this. I've never had more of a challenge. I have to keep cool, keep an easy flow of laughter going. If I had been directing this play 20 years ago I couldn't have done it."

During the rehearsal which will be followed by a matinee—Penny Fuller and Nicol Williamson, exhausted, keep missing lines and giggling. Williamson keeps saying one line as, "Madame, you dimish the throne I thit on." He jabs the air with a finger and says, "I've had it with this kingdom. What I need is three brandies."

But they get through the matinee without mishap. On Thursday, Sherin is rehearsing the cast in a scene that will end the first act. Henry's third wife has died in childbirth and rival factions in the court are pushing Anne of Cleves and Catherine Howard at him.

"You must choose, Majesty," says an earl, pushing forward the lovely Catherine. Nicol Williamson looks at Catherine and then around at the court.

He claps his hand on the arm of a handsome male dancer.

"I choose him!"

The lords and ladies crack up.

The Thursday audience is a good one, and the weekend performances are sold out. Spirits in the company are high. One staff member says, "I heard bells for the first time tonight."

On Friday, the cast is rehearsing the new opening number which features a song by Tom Aldredge, as the jester, which will wind through the opening dialogue between Henry and his court. In the middle of the rehearsal, Williamson marches off to his hotel room. He does not show up for a scheduled interview but does return for the show that night.

The new opening number is to go into the Saturday matinee. Williamson does not appear at the orchestra rehearsal before the show. The cast is blowing lines all over the stage. "Your Majesty, I—Oh forget the line!" says Cardinal Wolsey. Williamson must play the scene in an hour.

"Is he going to wing it?" asks an observer.

"You're learning," says the producer.

They stumble through the opener at the matinee. The orchestra strikes up at one point, but Williamson keeps talking. The orchestra stops.

Williamson is adding to his reputation for being mercurial and temperamental. "You don't know if he's going to be nice to you or punch you in the mouth," says one cast member. The company tends to regard its moody star as a lovely, expensive, intricate piece of machinery that just happens to have a time bomb in it. Williamson's unpredictability adds a current of tension to the whole affair. So much of "Rex" rides on his shoulders that no one wants to risk getting him upset.

Despite what one cast member called his "temper tantrum" on Friday, Williamson is back in form by Saturday night. Boston Herald critic Elliott Norton, seeing the show for the second time, writes that Williamson could play Henry with one hand tied behind his back and says that's exactly what he might do if he isn't in the mood to go all out. But, says Norton, this time Williamson was brilliant, and the show has a new, dynamic spirit.

When "Rex" packs up to leave Boston that night, it is still, in Richard Adler's words, "a work in progress." Two new songs will go in during rehearsal in New York. But "Rex" now seems to have the wind at its back. And the bells—were they really ringing, or was that only the tinkling sound of hope? The answer is waiting, in New York. ■

DANCE VIEW

Young Dancers Need Not Be ...acrificial Lambs

A ballet classroom is a cold place—a place for rituals, a place for learning, a place for initiation, a temple of pain. Dancers first go to class almost before they know it. Their parents send them there, and their young, supple bodies and pliable minds are ...med by the rigors of a discipline they learn to ... A ballet stage is something different—a place for ... a place for the exercising of expertise, a place ... audiences and other horrors. The distance between ...t classroom and a ballet stage is enormous; ...chasm and a mystery.

...ers go on stage very young. Sometimes they can ...oung as 14—an age for children, not for artists. ... age they often don't have much nerve; they ...aturally into the choreography with a kind of ...less grace, an innocence of pristine beauty. Later ...ill be artists, but at this moment, this first and ...s moment, they are, perhaps for the only time, ... performers. Life, however, goes on with different ...ges, and for the dancer naturalness will never be all. ...ntly, I have been thinking about what might be ...the mezzanine company. A dancer does not ...y emerge from the classroom like a butterfly ... chrysalis. A dancer slides into dance, acquiring ...nce and experience almost by osmosis. A ...ance here, a performance there, the slow initiation ...corps de ballet, the gradual explanation of what is ... by ensemble. Of course, a dancer can go straight ...e classroom into a major company—and that, indeed, ...ny years was the familiar pattern. You work brilliantly ...ool, a ballet director sees you, recognizes the ...e, puts you on a modest contract and, almost ...y, throws you on stage. There must be a better ... which is why I have been thinking of mezzanine ...nies.

...name is unofficial and personal. I was looking for ...ription of a company that could put a dancer on ... with all the risks and appurtenances of glory, yet ...t the deadly risk of a major occasion. Such mezzanine ...nies do exist, and they perform two distinct but ...ant functions—one for the dancers, the ... for an audience.

... of the difficulties of the current upsurge of interest ...ce has quite clearly been the simple supply of ... to people. After all, the performing arts are, by any ...ting, a deficit operation; the more dance is provided, the more the dance world is going, of necessity, to lose. It is difficult for new companies, with unknown repertories, untested dancers and untried management, to arise. And rightly so. Not everyone who wakes up one morning and thinks "What I would really like to do for the next few years of my life is to create and run a ballet company" has the ability to put such aspirations into reality. We need companies that can offer to the world an existing organizational and artistic structure, but are themselves something new. We need companies that derive from our present companies, and quite literally feed from their strengths.

The answer, it seems, is cadet companies, or what I have termed mezzanine companies. These companies must provide the new and expanding dance audience with the raw material of dance, at a high artistic level and under the best auspices, but also can offer some kind of bridge between that chilly impersonality of the classroom and the terrifying arena of the public stage. You don't have to make your debut in the spotlights of the Metropolitan Opera House, Covent Garden or the Bolshoi. There can be a gentler way.

A number of our dance companies are working on this problem by giving their students what might be called modified exposure, while at the same time meeting the increased demand for dance from the public. Last week, for instance, I visited the studios of the American Ballet Center, which is the official school of the City Center Joffrey Ballet, and watched a run-through of the Joffrey II company. There are twelve dancers, all of whom have come through the Joffrey school and will quite likely eventually end up in the Joffrey company. The company tours the country, using in part the Joffrey name and the Joffrey experience. It performs ballets by Anthony Tudor, Gerald Arpino and Lois Bewley, but most of all it shows a style of dance. This company, directed nowadays by Sally Bliss, has considerable energy and elegance. The dancers are eager—eager to learn, eager to perform, and even eager to face that moment of truth, that special, enduring relationship between artist and audience. So, this Joffrey company is providing two very vital services—one to a new audience and another to a new generation of dancers. The name of this particular game is experience.

The Joffrey II is only one of a number of mezzanine companies. American Ballet Theater has a most interesting company, directed by Richard England, which is connected to, yet different from the main Ballet Theater troupe. Its dancers are quite likely to graduate into the main company—perhaps slightly less likely than with the Joffrey cadets, for nearly three-quarters of the present Joffrey company has been through the mezzanine ranks of Joffrey II—and meanwhile the group continues to offer, across the country, a dance experience of a very high level.

Of course, when you are seeing these cadet companies you are definitely not seeing the reality of the full company, or more particularly the maturity of the full company. But you are at least seeing something assured by the Good Housekeeping seal of a major company that cannot afford to traduce its name. Alvin Ailey has a mezzanine group, a cadet company, which he entrusted with the TV debut of some of his major Duke Ellington works, and the results were splendid. New York City Ballet does not have a specific junior company yet—of all our companies, this is probably the one that should demonstrate its faith in youth—but it does, through its School of American Ballet, give many performances and demonstrations.

This is clearly a new pattern—a way in which major American companies can display across the country their repertories, and a way in which they can offer their favorite young dancers a stage that is not quite so terrifying as the arena of New York. Dancers do not have to be sacrificial lambs—everyone can gambol a little, and needs to, when the stakes are so high.

In the play, Vera, the young ward, plays Chopin off stage. "At first I was filled with horror," Sir Frederick recalled. "I thought I can't do another 'Dances at a Gathering' [Jerome Robbins's ballet set to Chopin]. I didn't want to have to sort out dozens of mazurkas and waltzes, and things." Then Michael Somes, a former leading dancer with the Royal Ballet, who has danced in most of Ashton's ballets and now supervises the company's rehearsals of his works, happened to lend Sir Frederick a record of three little-known Chopin pieces for piano and orchestra. "I liked them at once, but they seemed to be in the wrong order to fit a ballet. It never occurred to me that the order could be changed. Then, when I went to buy the record, I got a different version and the pieces were in the order I wanted. I set to work."

Sir Frederick played the Chopin music over and over, fitting it to the story and simplifying the story to fit the music. "I started in my usual way—eliminating everything, beheading people," he said. "I never intended to do a full realization—more a poetic evocation. I eliminated some of the play's characters, like the doctor and the rich merchant who marries Vera, from the beginning. The student is the focal character. I wanted to show that every female in the household is attracted to him, each in a different way. I wish now I'd called the ballet 'The Student,' which was one of Turgenev's first titles for the play."

Natalya Petrovna, the married woman whose moods change from coquettish charm to jealousy and rage to final sadness, is danced by Lynn Seymour. Sir Frederick chose Anthony Dowell for the role of the student; and for Vera, he discovered in the corps de ballet Denise Nunn.

When will Sir Frederick choreograph another major ballet? He won't say, for he must find another appealing idea first. Meanwhile, he is devising for Lynn Seymour some more Brahms waltzes, in the style of Isadora Duncan, to add to the one he created for her last year. Although a great admirer of Isadora Duncan, Sir Frederick is reluctant to discuss present-day modern dancers: "For one thing, I haven't seen most of them. I haven't been in the States for seven years. I did very much enjoy Twyla Tharp and her company when they came to London, and also Paul Taylor. But too much modern dance consists of groveling on the ground. I loathe the ground. It even invaded classical ballet in the 1960's. I would hate ballet to declassicize itself, and I hope the classical tradition will be maintained. But, of course, there is room for everything in dance." ■

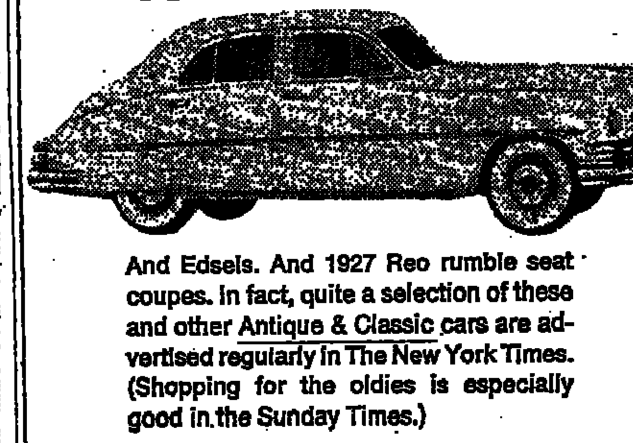
Some people are still crazy about 1950 Packards.



And Edsels. And 1927 Reo rumble seat coupes. In fact, quite a selection of these and other Antique & Classic cars are advertised regularly in The New York Times. (Shopping for the oldies is especially good in the Sunday Times.)

Whether you're in the market for a new, used, rented or leased car, you'll find plenty of excellent leads in the Automotive Pages of

How Nichols and Rabe Shaped 'Streamers'

gung-ho paratroop sergeants, quarrel about homosexuality and, ultimately, clash with a paranoid visitor who brings death into their midst. The title is a reference to a man plunging to his death at the end of an unopened parachute, and that grisly image becomes the leitmotif of "Streamers."

It's a long way from Nichols's earlier hits, such as "Barefoot in the Park," or even from the antiwar comedy of Joseph Heller's "Catch-22," which Nichols filmed in 1970. Nevertheless, the director doesn't think there's anything surprising about his association with Rabe. In fact, he doesn't like to draw distinctions between serious plays or films, and comedies.

Just before one of the last previews of "Streamers," Nichols sat in a lounge at the Newhouse, sipping coffee, and discussed the play that had taken up so much of his life for the last four months. He dismissed the apparent gulf between the violence and death in "Streamers" and the farcical concerns of "The Fortune," his most recent movie. "There's no good play or story in which some things aren't funny," he said, "even the most serious ones." There are, he pointed out, plenty of laughs in "Streamers," one of them occurring just after the most shocking action in the play. "It seems to me that if the moment is legitimate and truthful, then the audience should be free to react to it in any way they want."

Audiences have been reacting to the violence in "Streamers," he admitted, although he prefers not to dwell on the play's bloodier aspects. "We had some people faint in New Haven, where we first did 'Streamers' at the Long Wharf Theater. And a Vietnam veteran in the audience here broke down one night last week, but reactions like that have been relatively rare."

Questioned about this in a later discussion by telephone, Rabe remarked with quiet satisfaction that "it's like I must be doing something right, finally; to make violence unbearable, not salable. If people watching a human being knife another human being ask themselves, 'My God, why?' instead of shrugging it off, well, is that noncommercial violence or what? To me, it's theater's ability to reach people."

Nichols says that much of the work done on "Streamers" since its New Haven debut was intended to "connect the threads a little more closely. There are several stories going on, and they're really all one story. Perhaps in New Haven the later, violent portions of the play weren't enough rooted in the earlier portions," Nichols continued. "If the engine of the play is fear—if everyone is plunging toward earth, as maybe we all are—then what every character in the play runs into is the varied impulse to grab someone else in the short time left, and the equally varied rules about how that can or cannot be done. That's what ties it all together."

"Mike puts it better than I do," was Rabe's reaction to Nichols's summary. "I'd say the play also concerns the danger of overestimating what we share with one another, the danger that if you don't have uniformity of feeling with someone, then you have no connection with them. That forces people into making dangerous demands."

"Streamers," says Nichols, is also about people "drawing lines and refusing to go further, and about people trying to recruit others into their own reality." He finds no deliberate link between violence and homosexuality, but rather between violence and fear.

Rabe agrees. "The play is about people misunderstanding each other. The violence comes out of everybody lying to each other—the games, the lies, the masquerading, the maneuvering, are what make the violence happen."

"You know what this play also makes me think of?" Nichols asked. "Ethel Rosenberg. That last grab for the matron just before she was put into the electric chair. Which is certainly what any of us would do. We can understand why she embraced the matron. There's a strong element of that in the play, of a quick grab and a hug—as you might do to the person sitting next to you on a plane if the plane were about to crash. Unfortunately, what intervenes in most of our lives are the rules which say, 'You can hug like this, but not like that.'"

Rabe said that he and Nichols had "talked a lot about that metaphor. If you're in a dangerous situation, if you're lonely and frightened, you wish for somebody to grab hold of. Sex is probably the last thing on your mind. But say there's nobody around you but other men. . . . What does it mean if you suddenly embrace one of them? Everything goes on the line, identities, everything. The problems brought on by such a situation are a large part of what 'Streamers' is about."

The current association between Nichols and Rabe was some time in the making. Nichols says Rabe sent him the script of "In the Boom Boom Room" a couple of years ago, asking whether he'd like to direct it. Nichols didn't think the play was right for him, but decided he wanted to know more about Rabe. "I had seen his 'Pavlo Hummel' and read 'Sticks and Bones,'" he said. "So we talked once or twice. Then we met in California and started talking about working on a movie together."

Rabe came back East, but left Nichols a copy of "Streamers." That was enough. "I was very excited by the play," Nichols said. "I wanted to do it, but in a small theater and not in a Broadway situation." To the surprise of many who thought of David Rabe as the pride of producer Joseph Papp's stable of promising young playwrights, it was announced that Nichols would stage "Streamers" for Arvin Brown's Long Wharf Theater in New Haven. It was even whispered that Rabe was demonstrating his disaffection with Papp by giving his new play to the Long Wharf.

Not so, says Nichols. "I had wanted to do a play at the Long Wharf. I live near it. I know Arvin Brown. I like the theater and the plays that are done there. So I talked to Rabe about that and he said we should talk it over with Joe Papp. Joe said, 'If that's the theater you feel most comfortable in, then go and do it there.' So we did. We were all agreed that Papp would have first call on it after that. I must say he's been totally supportive from the first moment."

According to Rabe, "When Mike called and said he wanted to do the play, I was against it. I didn't want to do a play at all at that point, and I didn't want to come back to New York right then. I felt burnt out after having done four plays since 1971. Mike wanted to go to the Long Wharf with it right away and we had a long talk about that. Then there were some involved meetings with Joe Papp. Joe said it was my play and I could do what I wanted with it."

The 44-year-old Nichols, whose appearance has changed hardly at all since he and Elaine May took Broadway by storm with their improvisatory humor in 1960, says that he is happiest when rehearsing a play. He finds that shooting a movie is "painful, because of the time element." Rehearsing a play, a director has "room to breathe, to change things."

Rabe said that portions of "Streamers" go back "at least four or five years—fragments of speeches, characters. That's the way I work; I pick things up and put them down. The work I did after New Haven was mostly an attempt to focus the play more clearly."

"We helped each other," Nichols observed. "The whole process is aimed at making clearer and clearer in everyone's mind what is happening, what are the characteristics of the people that caused the events to take place. The writer is extremely important in helping to explore all that."

As a director Nichols believes in leaving the actor the freedom to find his own way of doing what the script requires. "You try never to say to an actor, 'Don't do this.' Never give a negative direction. It's impossible not to do something; it's only possible actively to do something else instead. Otherwise you have puppets, although some directors work that way with great success; Antonioni apparently tells actors how he wants them to position their arms and legs. Which leaves you with no sense of complication or mystery in people's behavior."

For all that, Nichols is noted for paying close attention to details. He works hard to tie the play to his own experience. Whether directing an "Uncle Vanya," a "Barefoot in the Park" or a "Streamers," he says, "the problems are always the same. You ask yourself, what is this situation like? Who are these people like? What is really taking place that isn't stated? And how can I make it physically manifest? The physical things that take place on stage should express the events that are beyond the words."

He went on: "Elia Kazan's phrase for it was 'turning psychology into behavior.' For example, in the scene where Richie, the homosexual, wants his roommates to clear out so he and his visitor can have sex, the problem of the actors and myself was to find a way to bring Richie to the point of telling the others to take a walk. I wanted to express physically what was going on in their minds, and the solution to that was to have Richie and Carlyle, the visitor, start playing an erotic game of footsie with one another. You keep adding things as they occur to you—it's a long process. At another point, the simple act of putting on dark glasses made one of the characters essentially unreadable, unreachable by his friend at a crucial moment. Again, it went beyond the words."

He remembers watching the stage work of Kazan and thinking, "These people seem to be in the course of their lives. I was startled by the life in those plays." Nichols, too, is in pursuit of life, not to capture it and hold it prisoner, but to free it on stage. "If it really happens in the theater," he said, "if there's real emotion on that stage, the audience doesn't necessarily know what name to give it but they know it's there. And they know when it isn't there. That's the job." ■

"The suspense in 'The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With The Sea' is spun out on film like the strands of a spider's web, with an ending that really stings. It's mature, sophisticated erotica, combining healthy lust with undertones of psychological terror. Sarah Miles and Kris Kristofferson are a white hot romantic team."
—Bruce Williamson, Playboy

"A work of art. Director Carlino has done an absolutely exquisite job...a story which lyrically combines romanticism with horror. Sarah Miles excels." —William Wolf, Cue Magazine

"A darkly chilling tale. Sarah Miles is a vibrant, but sexually repressed young widow. Breathtaking beauty and idyllic charm—lovingly photographed." —Kathleen Carroll, New York Daily News

"Sarah Miles the embodiment of erotic femininity..." —Judith Crist, Saturday Review

"A powerful emotional background...an atmospheric triumph. A relationship that manages to be romantic and erotic. Sarah Miles is spectacular; she makes sensual yearning convincing both in itself and as standing for the whole range of human want." —Richard Eder, New York Times

"'The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With The Sea' is sure to raise a storm of controversy. Highly original, hard-hitting film and uniquely frightening. The climax is brutally astounding and demoniacally haunting." —Norma McLain Stoop, After Dark

"As Bergman has moved closer and closer to his characters' hidden terrors, Nykvist's images have been stripped of prettifying details." (David Denby)

"STAY HUNGRY"—A horde of not so hungry-looking Mister Universe contenders board a bus in Bob Rafelson's film, opening today at the Trans-Lux East and 86th Street East Theaters.

Bergman's Cameraman

"This is right, this is truth," says Sven Nykvist of his shot of Liv Ullmann and Bibi Andersson in "Persona."

the most lonely and unhappy man in the world. I found this out when I myself directed a film."

It's been 11 years since Nykvist last directed a feature ("The Vine Bridge," unseen in this country and described by Nykvist himself as "not very good") and he doesn't speak of directing again with any particular urgency. He has good reason to be satisfied with his supporting role of cameraman. Critics agree that Nykvist's work for Bergman has far exceeded "beautiful" photography and effective "mood"; the psychological expressiveness of his lighting and compositions and the subtlety of his camera movement have become an integral part of Bergman's artistry. And the amazing thing is that none of Bergman's movies looks quite like another. It's a cardinal principle of Nykvist's that he must be prepared, if necessary, to change his style with each new picture.

How does Bergman inspire such devotion? His Svengali-like control of a brilliant company of actors has often been described and celebrated. As Nykvist tells it, his hold on his technical crew (a group of 18 or so people who have worked together, with only a few changes, for over 15 years) is no less remarkable a combination of seduction and domination. Two months before shooting is to begin, Bergman and the entire crew (including the men who will move the lights and furniture around) go off to a hotel in the north of Sweden. On the first morning Bergman discusses the new picture at considerable length — what he's trying to say in it; and why each of their contributions is important. Then the script girl begins to read the screenplay aloud from the very first line, with members of the crew frequently interrupting to ask questions and challenge individual points and Bergman, in turn, explaining, analyzing, persuading.

"We do this for two or three days," says Nykvist, "and then most of the people go off to work on other jobs. But they have already been hooked; they will be thinking of Bergman's film, thinking how they can please him. Meanwhile, the art director and I go to work on the lighting and color."

This is the point at which the technical minutiae of lens openings and film emulsions get translated into matters of the spirit. For "Cries and Whispers" Bergman wanted each room of the manor-house set to have dark red walls of a slightly different hue, depending on the emotional shading of the scenes to be shot there. So Nykvist shot thousands of feet of tests with actors standing against red walls.

Before shooting "Winter Light," an account of three hours in the life of an isolated clergyman who is losing his congregation and his belief in God, Bergman and Nykvist measured the changing light in a church in northern Sweden by making hundreds of stills at regular intervals. They they reproduced the changes artificially on a studio set in Stockholm. The infinite varieties of gray in this black-and-white film eloquently expressed the clergyman's spiritual dryness, his anguished emotional spectrum from melancholy to despair and then back again.

Bergman is so sure of Nykvist's unerring sense of composition that he himself looks through the camera only occasionally, and never through a portable viewfinder. To illustrate this point, Nykvist stood up and leaned over awkwardly, squinting through an imaginary viewfinder in imitation of a director trying a little too hard to look the part. "This is terrible because it puts a piece of equipment between the director and the actors. Instead, Ingmar frames the action with his hands," said Nykvist, extending his hands in front of his face, with the palms facing each other, and moving them closer and then farther apart. "I just watch his hands, which are incredibly sensitive, and I know whether he wants a wide-angle shot or a close-up or whatever."

Unlike Hollywood cinematographers, who are forced by union regulations to hire other men to push the button and move the camera, Nykvist always operates the camera himself, and the results speak for themselves. In "Face to Face," Liv Ullmann, playing a psychiatrist who suffers a nervous breakdown, has several intense monologues (one goes on for five or six minutes without a cut), and the camera moves in such harmony with the actress that it's almost as if her sensibility were in control. "After photographing Liv for ten years," Nykvist said. "I know intuitively when she's going to move. No one has to whisper into my ear, 'Pan right.' She did those monologues in one or, at most, two takes. The only trouble was that I was so moved that my eyes filled up with tears and I couldn't always see her clearly."

Perhaps one of the reasons that Nykvist works so well with Bergman is that, like the darkly pessimistic director, he is also haunted by memories of a painful childhood. His parents were Swedish missionaries who spent most of their adult lives in the Belgian Congo. Nykvist, however, was brought up by relatives in Sweden; his parents considered the malaria-infested Congo too dangerous for a young boy. As a result, until he was 13 he saw his parents only every fourth year when they would come home for a leave of absence. What he remembers most vividly from these visits is his father putting up a sheet and projecting home-crafted photographic slides of life in Africa.

"I was overpowered by these images of people and animals, and I remember having endless fantasies of living with my parents there. The photographs were my only contact, the only way to satisfy my longing for them, and after they would return to Africa we would mail photographs back and forth as a way of keeping together."

After his parents returned to Sweden in 1935, they forbade their son to go to the movies. "Like many deeply religious people, they thought children would learn bad habits—drinking, smoking, sexual promiscuity — by watching the adults on screen. Of course, what's forbidden becomes immensely powerful and I would sneak away to a theater whenever I had the money."

Forty years later, Bergman and Nykvist are indeed making movies about the emotional disorders of adulthood, the things that parents try to hide from children—not "sin" in the sexual or religious sense but the more deeply scandalous weaknesses of human nature: duplicity, cruelty, ravaging anxieties and guilt. And as Bergman has moved closer and closer to his characters' hidden terrors (and his own), Nykvist's images have been stripped of prettifying details. "In the past, I've put grease on the lens, used all sorts of filters, played tricks in the lab; but after 30 years of work I've come back to simplicity in lighting and framing. Bergman has taught me this: always work to bring out the emotional truth in a scene and take out everything that is there just for effect or beauty."

Nykvist suddenly picked up a book about Bergman and pointed to a shot from "Though a Glass Darkly" in which Gunnar Bjornstrand and Harriet Andersson sit at a window while the setting sun casts shadows on their faces. "You see, this is terrible," he moaned. "It's pretty but much too fancy. All those shadows distract you from what's happening between the characters. No, never again like this!"

He then flipped to a shot of Bibi Andersson and Liv Ullmann from "Persona" and his face lit up. "Now this is right, this is truth," he said, caressing the sinuous lines of Bibi Andersson's neck. "We filled the studio with fog to get that soft, dreamy feeling and used only a little light from overhead. You've got to have the guts to use very little light; it often makes a scene so much stronger and more natural."

In this compelling shot from "Persona," as in so much of "Face to Face" and the other recent films, Nykvist has given Bergman's nightmares and fantasies the look of realism without losing the emotional resonance of a dream. It's the kind of simplicity that only a very sophisticated artist would attempt. ■

Are Black Films Losing Their Blackness?

It may not actually be a trend as yet—it may simply be a superficial impression, based on several weeks of rather ordinary movie-going—but it does seem as if the bottom has dropped out of the market for black exploitation films. I'm referring to those supercharged, bad-talking, highly romanticized melodramas about Harlem superstuds, the pimps, the private eyes and the pushers who more or less singlehandedly make whitey's corrupt world safe for black pimping, black private-eyeing and black pushing. By next week I may be eating my hat, but right now it seems as if more and more films that once would have been categorized as black films are really films for the general market. They are black films that you don't have to be black to respond to favorably, or to find dreary and pretentious, or foolish and inept.

The most dynamic and entertaining of these "new" black films is a candidly commercial box-office attack called "Sparkle," a story about three young women from Harlem and the high price they pay in their climb to the top as the country's most popular singing-sister act. It sounds terrible, a sort of retread of "Sally, Irene and Mary" transposed to the never-never land ruled by Barry Gordy and Motown Records. The confusion may well be intentional. The routines performed by the girls in "Sparkle," and the new music provided them by Curtis Mayfield, definitely recall the style and effect of The Supremes and, in Lonette McKee, who plays the sister who goes bad, in the way Lana Turner did in a movie like "Ziegfeld Girl," it has a leading actress whose beauty, talent and verve recall the extraordinary Diana Ross herself.

"Sparkle," like "Mahogany," is a black up-date of the kind of show-biz and glamour movies that were so popular in the 1930's and 1940's. It's fairy-tale stuff, yet in its music and in its performances by Miss McKee and Irene Cara, as the good sister who survives the terrible pressures her talent brings to bear on her, it has so much vitality that one can tolerate its more obvious idiocies. Among these are its melodrama (some obligatory stuff about the mob) and the camerawork of Bruce Surtees who, with what I assume to have been the approval of Sam O'Steen, the director, has so underlit everything that you get the impression that the entire film, not just portions of it, is set in a smokey, dimly lit nightclub.

"Sparkle" is the first theatrical film to be directed by O'Steen, known heretofore as one of Hollywood's most successful editors ("Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?," "The Graduate," "Chinatown," etc.) and more recently as a television director. On the basis of one film, it's impossible to tell exactly where his strengths lie, but he appears to have an efficient, no-nonsense way with narrative and the talent to cast properly and then the ability to obtain first-rate performances from his actors.

Another matter of movie is "Boesman and Lena," which is not, strictly speaking, a black film, though when Athol Fugard's original play was done at the Circle in The Square in 1970, it starred James Earl Jones and Ruby Dee. This film version, made in South Africa in 1973 with the white Fugard himself as Boesman, will probably never receive wide commercial release here, and it's easy to understand why. It's virtually a two-character harangue, with much of that harangue spoken in South African accents that make it almost unintelligible to Americans. Though it qualifies as black since it can be played by black actors, it's of less interest as a polemic about South African apartheid than as a Beckett-like meditation upon the human condition.

In "Boesman and Lena" that condition has been effectively reduced to two, to Boesman and his wife, Lena, South African "coloreds," that is, people of mixed blood who are acceptable in neither the white nor black communities. At the beginning of the film when their shanty town is levelled by a bulldozer, Boesman and Lena must take to the road, which, as we learn, is the way they've spent their lives, moving from place to place, carrying on their backs a few essentials and the knowledge that this is the way things always will be. As they move back and forth across the debris-strewn flats on the edge of a large city, they sustain each other by their mutual hatred and fear. When they sit down to rest, Lena passes the time counting bottles (which they sell back to the bottlers) or bruises, which is how Boesman communicates with her. Boesman, who is the clown in front of whites, is vicious, cruel and slightly mad. Why do they keep going? Because they cannot not go on. As Lena says, "I'm on the earth, not in it."

Though Ross Devenish, the director, has filmed the play in recognizably real settings, he has successfully maintained the play's claustrophobic mood. The broad, flat horizon, against which Boesman and Lena endlessly tramp, is broken occasionally by views of the distant city, by a busy highway, or, most menacing, by the silhouette of a huge power plant that will always be for the service of others. In addition to being a record of an extraordinary play by South Africa's leading playwright, "Boesman and Lena" gives us a visual image of human isolation more haunting than any I've ever seen in a motion picture.

"The River Niger" also is a film adaptation of a theater piece—the Joseph A. Walker play that was first done by the Negro Ensemble Company in 1972 and then moved to Broadway where it won a Tony award. It is, essentially, a black variation on the kind of family melodrama that Arthur Miller used to write, but everything that was theatrical and artificial and acceptable on stage now looks gross in this film adaptation, which is unfortunate since the playwright seems to have a feeling for the way people talk and behave, at least when they aren't under stress.

The cast is headed by James Earl Jones and Cicely Tyson, who are fine actors when they have the material. Here they are left up in the air by the script and by Krishna Shah, the director who might conceivably have imposed some coherence on the work. Even technically, it's a mess.

"Countdown at Kusini" is Ossie Davis's solemn adventure melodrama set in an emerging African nation. It's a movie that wants to be "serious" about African political aspirations while also being entertaining. Though it tries hard, it's neither, but it does recall fond memories of two movies Davis made some years ago—"Cotton Comes to Harlem" and "Gone Are The Days"—when he still had an outrageous sense of humor.

Solemnity and humorlessness also are a problem with "The Long Night," the first theatrical film to be directed by Woody King, Jr., who, as a producer, has been responsible for much of the excitement on New York's black theater scene. The film, about a little Harlem boy's search for his father, is serious but awfully workmanlike, which means it's so busy saying the right things, presenting a picture of Harlem that avoids the melodramatic clichés, that it never allows itself any spontaneity, any sign of the kind of life that distinguishes art from thesis.

The point of these films, good and bad? It's an important one—that filmmakers, black and white, feel there must be alternatives to Shaft, Coffy, Superfly and even Blacula.

Is the Great American Opera Really an Opera?

When Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" opened in New York on October 10, 1935, few people seemed to know what to make of this unique blend of Broadway, blues, Tin Pan Alley and grand opera. Theater critics, attuned to Gershwin's musical comedy successes, praised the songs but felt that the elaborately through-composed connective passages—recitatives, choral interjections, orchestral interludes—impeded the action. Music critics took a totally opposite view. They were impressed by the composer's technical ingenuity and inventiveness but objected to the songs, which, they maintained, condescended to low popular taste.

Over the past 40 years, these very songs—"Summertime," "I Got Plenty O' Nothin'," "Bess, You Is My Woman Now" and the rest—have become an integral part of America's musical life (even music critics like them now), and yet the work as a whole still seems to defy categorization. We have heard the music interpreted many ways, by classical singers, pop vocalists, jazz stylists; the score has been presented as a straightforward musical comedy, a vehicle for jazz improvisation and now, in a new recorded version on London Records, as opera; it has been produced in an assortment of arrangements for the opera house, radio, television, film and touring companies. What exactly are we to call such an unusual piece of musical theater?

The question never bothered Gershwin—he simply termed "Porgy and Bess" an opera and he was tremendously proud of his achievement: "I think the music is so marvelous," he once admitted candidly; "I really can't believe I wrote it." The score's "identity problem"—if indeed it is a problem that a musical work possessed of such vitality can communicate on so many diverse levels—is ours, not "Porgy's." Despite the popular touches, it remains very much an opera and with the release of London's new recording, the first to present the full score exactly as the composer wrote it, we can now finally assess the work on that basis.

What makes "Porgy" an opera is its technical and expressive scope: as in the operas of Mozart and Verdi, nearly every element fuses to produce a fully realized, balanced musical-dramatic entity. The score is a long one—over three hours on this recording—but there are very few expendable moments. Take the first scene, for example, which is a brilliantly managed piece of operatic exposition.

During the course of the action we are given a striking picture of night life in the slum-tenement of Catfish Row: Jasbo Brown plays his out-of-tune upright piano as half a dozen couples dance hypnotically to the syncopated rhythms; Clara sings her baby to sleep amid a group of women resting after the day's labor; another group of men are engaged in a lively crap game. Gradually the personalities and the conflicts of the drama come into focus. There are two opposing forces in Catfish Row that set the scene for tension and trouble: on the one hand Serena and Maria, two domineering matrons who uphold the old order of superstitious religion and stiff conventionality; on the other, Sporting Life, the shady peddler of "happy dus' " who represents the disruptive influence of big-city amorality in this simple community. Caught in between are the three central characters of the drama: Porgy, the crippled beggar; Crown, a husky, brawling bully; and Bess, his girl. By the time the curtain falls, Crown has murdered Serena's husband in a drunken quarrel and escapes, while Bess takes shelter in Porgy's room as the police arrive.

Gershwin has composed this scene as a dazzling tour de force, a complex structure of cross-related themes interspersed with ariosos such as "A Woman Is a Sometin' Thing" and "Oh, Little Stars" (half-arias, as Benjamin Britten calls similar passages in the comparable opening sequences of his operas "Peter Grimes" and "Billy Budd"). At every turn he takes advantage of effects that are only possible in an operatic context: the exciting moment of Porgy's entrance, for example, underlined by music that seems to sum up his entire expansive, warm-hearted personality, or the orchestra's poignant recapitulation of the melody "When Gawd make cripple. He mean him to be lonely," at the end of the scene as Bess steals into Porgy's room to share his life.

There are many such discoveries to be made from listening to the London recording. Of course the songs, or arias, we might as well call them—still instantly catch the attention, but even these well-known tunes sound fresh and new when heard in their proper surroundings. Gershwin wrote hundreds of marvelous songs before "Porgy," but here he really surpassed himself. "Bess, You Is My Woman Now" is as catchy and spontaneous as anything he ever composed previously, but the unusually angular nature of the vocal line and the sophisticated harmonic movement raise this duet into something far more than a pop show-stopper. No wonder these songs have taken on a life apart from the opera, rearranged in every conceivable fashion—just as the hit-tunes of Verdi's operas were adapted to suit the performing conditions of the moment a century ago.

Lorin Maazel conducts the Cleveland Orchestra in the London recording and he makes no apologies for the operatic view he takes of the score. Basically he is right, and there are splendid dividends in the rich sound of the instrumental texture and, for the first time on disks, the full symphonic impact of Gershwin's imaginative score. One might have wished that Maazel had infused the music with a bit more rhythmic vitality and theatrical presence—there is a touch of stiff formality to his reading that has apparently communicated itself to the singers as well. # The Truth About 'Lulu'

To the Editor:

In Harold C. Schonberg's article "Next Season at the Met" (March 28), the statement was made that Alban Berg's "Lulu" has been performed in the United States only outside of New York.

Please be advised that "Lulu" was given a very exciting performance by the Opera Company of Boston at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn in the fall of 1967, staged and conducted by Sarah Caldwell. Earlier that same year the Hamburg Opera brought their production to the Metropolitan Opera House.

CARL BERGMAN
Kew Gardens, N.Y.

To the Editor:

In Harold C. Schonberg's article on the Met's repertory next season, he refers to me as one of the Berg authorities who "say that it would be no great problem to put a third act [of "Lulu"] together that would closely approximate what Berg had in mind."

Nobody has "to put a third act together" because Berg himself had already done this about a year and a half before he died. He left a complete short score, not merely "sections of short score and many sketches," as Mr. Schonberg says in his article. What remains incomplete is the orchestration. At the time of his death Berg had scored the first 268 bars of Act 3, and in addition to this we have large sections of the final scene that he had scored previously for inclusion in the "Lulu" Suite. A complete piano-vocal score of Act III was prepared for publication and partially engraved in 1937, but the project was interrupted because of the political situation in Austria at the time, and it has never been resumed.

GEORGE PERLE

To the Editor:

I have just read Harold C. Schonberg's article about some recent new operas, in particular "Ashmedai" (April 11). May I suggest, frankly but not at all humbly, that Mr. Schonberg's hatred for opera in English has by now seriously affected his ears.

I went to the dress rehearsal of "Ashmedai." I had no idea what it was all about; I had seen neither the libretto nor the score, nor read the story. Whatever my reaction to the music, I was struck by the unusual clarity of the text. I would say 50 percent of the words were understandable. Which only goes to prove that there is no one so deaf as the one who does not want to hear.

JOHN GUTMAN

To the Editor:

Paul Kresh may know a lot about Hi-Fi, but he doesn't know much about Sci-Fi. In his article (April 4) he writes about Leonard Nimoy's portrayal of Mr. Spock, an emotionless Martian. As everyone knows, Spock is really a Vulcan.

HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

One's Laughing t Percy Grainger Anymore

ast week, at the McMillin Theater, there was a concert devoted to the music of Percy Grainger. Percy Grainger! The very idea of a Grainger concert would have evoked howls of laughter 20 years ago. Grainger in those days was primarily regarded as a pianist. He also was the r of such pretty tunes as "Country Gardens" st famous piece), "Shepherd's Hey" and "Molly ihore." Kitsch, in short.

if the intellectuals refused to take him seriously ative figure, concertgoers thronged to his concerts. a remarkable pianist—big, breezy, uninhibited, mantic. This tall, remarkably handsome man with dline profile and figure of an athlete, also was py. Grainger was one of the eccentrics of music. e would don a knapsack and hike from concert rt. When he married Ella Viola Ström, he took over re Hollywood Bowl and invited his friends plus, t, the entire city of Los Angeles. The highlight of ir was his bridal present, "To a Nordic Princess," sition he himself naturally conducted.

musical credentials were impeccable. He had t of Australia, where he was born on July 8, Germany he studied with James Kwast and io Busoni, then started concertizing and composing. was very interested in the young Australian, and a iendship resulted after they met in 1906. "If I had onique," Grieg said, "my conception of the nature o playing would have been exactly the same." Grieg Grainger his A minor Concerto, and for the rest ife Grainger was the "official" interpreter of that piece.

fore settling in the United States in 1914 (Grainger a citizen) he had his headquarters in England s an active member of the emergent British nationalists. Like Bartók in Hungary, Grainger ound the countryside with a gramophone— g and recording folk music, transcribing it, using terial as a basis for his own music. He was part oup that included Gustav Holst, Ralph Vaughan s, Carl Dolmetsch, Cecil Sharp and Philip Heseltine. took folk music with utmost seriousness, and considered it primitive or unformed. "Believing ," he once wrote, "that music is always perfect t all races, at all times and in all places, I cannot ny conception of musical progress that sees music gradually from worse to better, and which re belittles primitive music or the earliest le beginnings of art music." Quite the contrary. r believed that the best music should aspire pirit of folk music. Most music, he stated, d back by "highly artificial and rule-clad forms." usic, on the other hand, showed much greater a and irregularity—a condition towards which sic should aspire.

e influence of folk music can be traced in nearly rainger's music. There are the obvious derivations, e, his direct translations for piano, or voices, or er, of folk music. But the folk presence breathes r Grainger's abstract works and, especially, in called "free music."

this music," Grainger explained, referring to his usic, "melody is as free to roam thru tonal space inter is free to draw & paint free lines, free create free shapes. . . . In FREE MUSIC the tone-strands (melodic lines) may each have their hythmic pulse (or not), if they like; but one rand is not enslaved to the other (as in current by rhythmic same-beatedness. In FREE music re no scales. . . . In FREE MUSIC harmony will of free combinations (when desired) of all free ls—not merely concordant or discordant ations of set intervals (as in current music), e combinations of all the intervals (but in a state, not needfully in an anchored state) n the present intervals . . ."

This is a statement that Ives or Varèse would have ied. Grainger was composing unusual music at the the century. But he was marked forever by ry Gardens," which is not representative of his over rks. Grainger was not taken seriously as a er. When he died, in White Plains on Feb. 20, 1961, would have given him much chance of making creative figure.

t he was not forgotten, as it turned out. In 1966 in Britten put his enormous prestige behind r's work. In an Aldeburgh Festival program he ed an entire evening of Grainger. "Grainger is my " he said. Several years later Britten, Peter Pears ers collaborated in a disk of Grainger's music, t attracted much attention. It might be while mentioning that Grainger himself had a long n the record studios—from around 1910 to the 0's. He played a good deal of his own music, ion to standard keyboard classics by Liszt, nn, Chopin and others. Some of the interpretations ntric. All are pianistically dazzling.

nks to Britten, and to a Grainger festival in London Grainger suddenly became respectable. Only last significant piece of Grainger scholarship was issued Monograph 2 published by the Department of f the University of Western Australia. It was "A e Catalogue of the Works of Percy Grainger," by Teresa Balough.

riously nobody is going to be in a great rush to t with a Grainger Gesamtausgabe. One works on nise that Grainger was a minor composer who d his share of salon fluff. But his period pieces great charm—yes, even the famous (or infamous) Bells," which gussies up Bach's great melody, May Safely Graze." In many respects Grainger hild of his time.

in certain prophetic pieces he was ahead of . Some of the Busoni theorizing might have off on young Grainger, and there was the influence ritish Folk Music Society figures. But whatever on, Grainger did compose some music that, edom, alertness, daring (for its time) and real much more interesting than a good deal of the bitious and pretentious music of the day.

there was that defiant iconoclasm that extended the instructions to the performer. No Italian for ridge Grainger. None of those "molto adagio" l crescendo" markings. When you want the r to arpeggiate a chord, you write: "violently d." When you want the melody emphasized, you he top notes louder and sharper than the rest." u want a big climax you write: "louden lots." n you really want the pressure to be applied, e "louden hugely."

"I'm looking for someone to carry on. To be quite honest, I would like the Festival to continue after my death."

What's Ahead for Karajan's One-Man Music Festival?

SALZBURG

The Salzburg Easter Festival, Herbert von Karajan's annual musical happening, celebrated its 10th birthday last week with sold-out houses, mixed critical reviews and the prospect of an uncertain future.

People come from all over Europe to hear Karajan and the Berlin Philharmonic play opera (an event that happens only once a year) and the Festival is, perhaps, the one institution of its kind in the world that maintains a waiting list of potential sponsors, all of them eager to help underwrite its staggering costs. The center of attraction is, of course, Karajan himself, the multi-talented maestro who created the Festival and remains its sole proprietor. Karajan's absolute technical control of the Berlin Philharmonic, his mastery of dynamics and texture, his ability to view a score with a mixture of controlled passion and an architect's eye for structure and detail, make him a consistently fascinating and controversial artist. These qualities were all present in the sumptuous new "Lohengrin" production, conducted and staged by Karajan, which combined a sensitive reading of the Wagner score with a minimum of onstage drama.

Visually, the production (designed by Günther Schneider-Siemmsen) is very handsome. All three acts are enclosed in a giant carved gold frame which, with its slender columns and pointed arches, resembles an enormous Gothic altarpiece. In the center of this frame the drama — which Karajan seems to view as a one-dimensional medieval myth of good versus evil—unfolds. On either side, partially hidden by transparent scrims, stands a permanently immobile chorus which is put in the unhappy position of commenting on the stage action. (This was not Wagner's intent. His chorus, which consists of the citizens of Brabant, is an integral part of the story.) The sets—two elegant platforms and a couple of trees for the banks of the river Scheldt, a castle wall, a Byzantine-arched square, and a nuptial chamber—are ingenious abstract versions of medieval manuscript illustrations. The costumes by Georges Wakhevitch are stiff, medieval robes in blue, green, red, silver, and gold.

René Kollo, with his round face and slight body, is an appealing teen-aged Lohengrin. His voice, a sweet, medium-sized tenor, sounded forced in the first two acts—he has a tendency to slide up to exposed high notes—but he gathered strength and security to deliver a moving "In fernem Land" at the end. As Elsa, the young Bulgarian soprano Anna Tomowa-Sintow displayed a large, clear lyric voice with a cool silvery top and a slight vibrato in the middle range. Ursula Schröder-Feinen, a true dramatic soprano, was having an off-night; her high notes frequently sounded shrill and she failed to capture the malevolence of Ortrud's personality. Karl Ridderbusch, his robust bass booming out over the orchestra, was a superb King Henry and the two baritones, Siegmund Nimsgern (Telramund) and Robert Kerns (the Herald), sang with power and authority.

Karajan provided a leisurely, thoughtful reading of the score that suddenly picked up momentum in the last act. The Berlin Philharmonic brasses attacked Wagner's thundering climaxes with an intensity that nearly blew the audience out of their seats; woodwinds emerged with poignant clarity in the soft passages, and the strings produced a consistently ravishing stream of sound.

Although the Festival continues to attract a large and loyal audience (seats must be booked a year in advance), a number of problems have surfaced in recent months and are being discussed openly for the first time. The main concern is Karajan's health. Viewed from the auditorium the maestro looks a trifle thinner, but his step is brisk, and his dynamic conducting of the Berliners seems to indicate a complete recovery from his recent back operation. Nevertheless, his unexpected six-week illness *caused considerable dis*location in the Festival schedule; opera rehearsals were late, a planned EMI recording of "Lohengrin" begun on March 3, is less than half-finished and there were several last-minute substitutions in the concert programs.

This, in turn, led to some serious thinking about artistic insurance for the future. When asked point blank if he had provided for an alternate conductor in case of illness and a successor in the event of his death, Karajan, who has never missed a performance in the 10 years of the Festival's existence, was evasive. "Up to now I've always seen to it that the program would continue if I should become ill," he told a recent interviewer. "What I'm really looking for now is someone from approximately 10 young talents who could take over half the responsibilities and would be qualified to carry on. To be quite honest I would like to have this continue after my death. A German industrialist once said 'If you haven't chosen your successor by the age of 60 [Karajan is 68], you should have already retired.' I am quite certain that one or two talents will develop in the next five years so as to come into consideration." The difficulty here is that no standby conductor has ever been identified—even in festival gossip —and Karajan does not seem to be looking very hard for a successor.

A second problem is purely financial; costs have more than doubled since 1970 and even with ticket prices at an all-time high (a $75 top for opera) the Festival just squeaks by on an annual budget of $1.5-million. A little over half of this ($800,000) is a subsidy from the city and state governments. The rest ($700,000) comes from ticket sales, contributions from 1,950 sponsors and broadcast fees.

Advance planning is another headache. In recent months the city and state authorities have been asking the Festival's General Manager—a lawyer and former classmate of Karajan's named Dr. Erich Aigner—for a three-year plan that will place the Festival on a sound financial basis. Dr. Aigner *throws up his hands in dis*pair at the idea. "We can't guess next year's deficit because we don't know next year's plans," he said. "There may be a repeat of 'Lohengrin' and possibly a new 'Trovatore' but nothing has been officially announced . . ."

Karajian's illness presumably led to several disappointing changes in the concerts (Webern, Berg and Mahler were replaced by Mozart, Schumann and Strauss) and the absence of his usual press conference announcing the next year's program. There were also persistent rumors of artistic conflicts which became public knowledge with the appearance of a front-page article in the Salzburger Volksblatt on April 15. René Kollo, who had been announced as too *ill to sing the second "Lohen*grin," was said by the Volksblatt to have removed himself from the production because of differences with Karajan. (Kollo was replaced for the second performance by Karl-Walter Böhm, a stentorian young tenor from Mannheim.) Karl Ridderbusch, Karajan's favorite bass, was reported to have written the maestro a letter regretfully stating that he could not participate in future Festival productions. Finally, the paper said that the Berlin Philharmonic — unhappy over last-minute program changes and the absence of a firm schedule for next year, was considering pulling out too.

A major source of general discontent seems to be the increasing influence of Karajan's personal manager for Europe—a Swiss impresario named Emil Jucker—in the artistic planning of the Festival. Jucker, whose name does not appear anywhere in the official program, is believed to exercise veto power over casting for opera and choral works. Since he represents a number of singers as well as Karajan himself, the Salzburgers grumble that he is building a Swiss management empire at their expense. Jucker also controls access to Karajan and, in the somewhat Byzantine atmosphere that now surrounds the maestro, is regarded as a man to fear.

But despite present intrigue and future uncertainty, the Easter Festival continues to be a unique celebration of one man's complex and magnetic personality. It has survived 10 years, and it will probably go on surviving with or without the Berlin Philharmonic—because Karajan has made it one of the musical glories of Europe. ■ possess major operatic voices and they sing the notes with sensitivity, although both seem rather reluctant to abandon themselves to their roles. The same might be said of McHenry Boatwright (Crown) and François Clemmons (Sporting Life)—solid, earnest performers but one can imagine these vivid parts projected with more personality. All the subsidiary characters are well-delineated: Barbara Hendricks, sweetly appealing as Clara; Florence Quivar, plangently expressive as the tragically bereft Serena; Barbara Conrad, tough and commanding as Maria; Arthur Thompson, a smoothly lyrical Jake. London's sonics and production effects create an immediate sense of atmosphere, both in the disk version and on the cassettes which match, if not surpass, the excellent sound of the records.

'Porgy'—The Great American Opera

For all its passing flaws, this new recording is an indispensable document and an often moving account of an operatic masterpiece. It complements rather than displaces the only other "Porgy" on disks, an album made by Columbia Records about 25 years ago and reissued on its Odyssey label. Although marred by numerous cuts and a rather thin-sounding musical-comedy type pit orchestra, this early performance is so well sung, so infectiously conducted by Lehman Engel and so imaginatively produced for home listening by Goddard Lieberson that any "Porgy" aficionado must hear it. Lawrence Winters and Camilla Williams bring the title roles to life with an urgency their London counterparts simply cannot command (listen to Camilla Williams's scorching delivery of "Have one to the Gawd fearin' ladies—there's nothin' like 'em, thank Gawd"—she instantly creates the totally possessed "she-devil" of Serena's description). This version also includes several members of the original cast who contribute a special aura of authenticity.

Of the many single disks containing highlights from "Porgy," several are of some historical importance and well worth investigating. One, on Mark 56, reproduces an especially fascinating session, as Gershwin himself plays the piano and leads the orchestra in several try-out takes made during the rehearsals before the 1935 premiere. Not only does this record capture the composer's own conception of how the music should be played—strictly in tempo and note true—but it lets us hear Abbie Mitchell and Ruby Elzy, the first Clara and Serena, in their two major songs which they never recorded commercially.

The original Porgy and Bess, Todd Duncan and Anne Brown, can be heard on a Decca record taped in 1940. Duncan's warm, wide-ranging baritone and easy way with a lyric make him an ideal Porgy, certainly the best singer to have recorded this music. Probably the finest voice to interpret Bess belongs to Leontyne Price, who toured extensively in the opera throughout the world during the mid-50's with William Warfield as Porgy. A memento of that memorable production is on RCA and Price sets some opulent vocal standards here, singing "Summertime" and "My Man's Gone Now" as well as Bess's music with a passionate fervor she rarely brings to her more conventional operatic roles.

It would be impossible to mention all the pop singers who have recorded "Porgy's" songs over the years, but at least two jazz arrangements deserve to be noted. One is the Gil Evans-Miles Davis collaboration on 13 pieces from the score. These are real re-creations, a sophisticated exploration of the music's jazz roots that still manages to preserve the essential melodic and dramatic character of the original. A second jazz treament, this time of the full opera (heavily cut, however), has just been reissued by Bethlehem. There is some exciting instrumental work to be heard on these records by a stellar group of musicians—Duke Ellington, Maynard Ferguson, Clark Terry, Ray Nance, Herbie Mann and Johnny Hodges, to name only a few. The intruding soap-opera narration is ludicrous, however, and the singing ranges from Mel Tormé's blandly vocalized Porgy to Frances Faye's grotesquely sung Bess.

All of these disks contain something of value. But for Gershwin's original operatic conception of "Porgy," the London recording stands by itself, a full statement of a constantly self-renewing work that can truly claim the title of The Great American Opera.

NEXT STOP GREENWICH VILLAGE—Paul Mazursky's film about a nice young Jewish boy from Brooklyn who, [illegible] fame and fortune as an artist in Greenwich Village in the early [illegible]. "All of the performers are good and some are exceptionally good.... the film that Mazursky creates for them is less a recollection than a déjà-vu, so awkwardly and obviously constructed that you want to scream for the actors at the wrong moments." (Canby) (R) At local theaters.

ONE FLEW OVER THE CUCKOO'S NEST—Miles Forman's film, based on Ken Kesey's 1962 novel, about Randle Patrick McMurphy, who has gone from a prison farm to a psychiatric hospital for observation. The story is the duel between Randle (Jack Nicholson) and Nurse Ratched (Louise Fletcher) for the remnants of the minds of the other patients. The movie "is at its best when Mr. Forman is exercising his talents as a director of exuberant comedy that challenges preconceived notions of good taste." (Canby) (R) At local theaters.

THE RIVER NIGER—A film made from Joseph A. Walker's award-winning play for the Negro Ensemble Company about a working-class family's struggle to survive the ghetto. Directed by Krishnah Shahr with Cicely Tyson, James Earl Jones, Lou Gossett. "What really wrecks the screen version of 'The River Niger' is... what appears to be a total lack of cohesive style and cinematic intelligence." (Canby) (R) Loews State I, Bway at 45th St. (582-5860); Fine Arts, 58th St. at Lex. Ave. (PL 5-6096); UA East, First Ave. and 85th St. (249-5100)

ROBIN AND MARIAN—A film based on the conviction of screenwriter James Goldman that Robin Hood and Maid Marian lived happily ever after in Sherwood Forest for no more than a year and that Robin then took off on a crusade with Little John. "A very appealing, contradictory sort of movie, a spectacle and a satire that is most winning when it is being most straight as a somber love story," with the "wit, strength and sheer presences of Sean Connery and Audrey Hepburn in the title roles." (Canby) Directed by Richard Lester. (PG) Radio City Music Hall, Sixth Ave. and 50th St. (757-3100).

THE SAILOR WHO FELL FROM GRACE WITH THE SEA—A film combining a story about the activities of a band of Nietzsche-besotted children (straight out of "Lord of the Flies") and the love story of the mother of one of them and a merchant marine officer. Directed by Lewis John Carlino; with Sarah Miles and Kris Kristofferson. Based on a short story by Yukio Mishima. "There is a beguilement to 'Sailor'... that of sitting through a state of irascible unconsciousness while being more than half seduced." (Eder) (R) Coronet, Third Ave. at 59th St. (EL 5-1663); UA Cinema 150, Syosset, L.I. (516 364-6700).

SALSA — Jerry Masucci and Leon Gast's film purporting to tell the history of Latin-rock music through two concerts, one in Yankee Stadium and one in San Juan. Celia Cruz, Jose Feliciano, Ray Barretto appear. "'Salsa' is an 80-minute record jacket." (Eder) (No rating) New Embassy, Seventh Ave. at 46th St. (75-3160)

SEVEN BEAUTIES — Lina Wertmuller's film about the survival of a Neapolitan dandy in a German concentration camp. "It's a disorderly epic, seductively beautiful to look at, as often harrowing as it is boisterously funny, though it has a solid substructure of common sense and precisely observed details from life." (Canby) Giancarlo Giannini and Fernando Rey star. (No rating) Plaza, 58th St. and Madison Ave. (EL 5-3320); Hampton Arts, Westhampton, L.I. (516 288-2600).

SKY RIDERS—An adventure film about the kidnapping by political terrorists of an American industrialist's wife and children from their Athens home. Directed by Douglas Hickox, with James Coburn, Susannah York, Robert Cuts, "After the flying, 'Sky Riders' is one long boring crash; as well as vice versa." (Eder) (PG) At local theaters.

SPARKLE—A movie about three black sisters who try to become successful Harlem pop singers. Directed by Sam O'Steen. "It is a sob story, and a predictable one....its major virtue is some first-rate songs written by Curtis Mayfield." (Eder) (PG) R.K.O. 86th Street Twin I, at Lex. Ave. (AT9-8900); Cinerama, Bway at 47th St. (245-5711); Five Towns, Woodmere, L.I. (516 374-2222)

THE STORY OF ADELE H.—Francois Truffaut's film about Adele Hugo (daughter of the French poet and patriot, Victor Hugo), whose passion for a young English officer is unrequited. "It's a poet's appreciation of the terrifying depth of Adele's feelings." (Canby) In French (No rating). At local theaters.

THE STRONGEST MAN IN THE WORLD—A Walt Disney comedy about two college students who concoct a formula that gives people unlimited strength—another of the company's "mad-formula" stories, though this one "has a lot of cheerful things in it" and "the reassuring appearance of Eve Arden and Phil Silvers." (Canby) (G) At local theaters.

THE SUNSHINE BOYS—An adaptation of Neil Simon's Broadway hit about the disastrous attempts to reconcile two old-time vaudevillians (George Burns and Walter Matthau) for a one-shot revival of their act on a TV special. It "makes you grin almost continuously, laugh out loud on a number of occasions, and then, at the end, leaves you wondering if that's all there is." (Canby) Directed by Herbert Ross. (PG) At local theaters.

TAXI DRIVER—Martin Scorsese's film about the life and dreams of a lonely psychotic New York taxi driver (Robert De Niro). "'Taxi Driver' is a vivid, galvanizing portrait of a character so particular that you may be astonished that he makes consistent dramatic sense." (Canby) (R) At local theaters.

VIRILITY—Carlo Ponti's comedy attacking the mores and machismo of the inhabitants of a Sicilian village. "The movie can boast sun-washed scenery that is escapist entertainment in itself." (Van Gelder) In Italian (No rating)) 48th Street Playhouse, Third Ave. and 48th St. (RE4-0302)

W. C. FIELDS AND ME—Arthur Hiller's film based on the book by Carlotta Monti about the famous comedian. Rod Steiger and Valerie Perrine star. "At its best, the movie... is superfluous; at worst it's misleading. It diminishes his eccentric talent." (Canby) (PG) Criterion, Bway and 45th St. (582-1795); Baronet, Third Ave. and 59th St. (EL 5-1663); 34th Street East, 34th St. and Second Ave. (683-0255)

W. W. AND THE DIXIE DANCEKINGS—John G. Avildsen's film about a bold-up man named W. W. (Burt Reynolds) and a third-rate, five-piece country band he adopts and guides to Grand Ole Opry stardom. "It's a skylarking sort of movie, full of good humor and naive optimism." (Canby) With Art Carney. (PG) At local theaters.

At 38, the "world's greatest living dancer" takes stock of his past, present and future — in this exclusive interview by John Gruen for AFTER DARK.

In his own words, Nureyev confides the real reasons why he came to the West . . . his views of U. S. dance critics and his fellow dancers . . . how he grapples with the loneliness of stardom . . . why he hates holidays . . . what he thinks of his first venture into movies — as the star of Ken Russell's new film on Valentino!

Here is Nureyev, the man behind the myth: shy, unpretentious, always honest. Sharing with you his personal thoughts in the May issue of AFTER DARK.

Every month AFTER DARK profiles the most fascinating personalities on today's entertainment scene. We take you on-stage — and backstage, too — for an exciting look at the world of contemporary theater, dance, music and films. We bring you commentary, interviews, photo essays . . . and the most perceptive reviews published anywhere on the lively arts.

Why not see for yourself? Start your subscription with our current issue and enjoy 8 months of America's most entertaining reading — at a special low introductory price.

Nureyev In His Own Words

Performing: "All my days are about conserving my physical and emotional energies so that I can tap them at any moment on the stage."

Loneliness: "I can not imagine having ties."

Critics: "Years ago it was predicted that I would crumble . . . I'm still here."

Competition: "I never try to compete. I only try to dance better than myself."

Martha Graham: "She hypnotized me. I had never seen anything so magnetic."

Stage Jitters: "We are paid for our fear."

Style: "It has taken me 15 years to develop a style."

Playing Valentino: "I will wear those wonderful, crazy clothes, speak lines . . . dance the tango. It should be fun."

MASTERPIECE THEATRE PRESENTS A SIX-WEEK TV DRAMA YOU WILL KEEP WITH YOU THE REST OF YOUR LIFE.

Sunset Song, starting tonight on Masterpiece Theatre, sets the sweet softness of a girl growing to womanhood against the beautiful hardness of northeastern Scotland's landscape. It is a six-part adaptation of a novel widely thought to be one of Scotland's best, acted by that country's most gifted performers.

Sunset Song is moving and evocative, pervaded by the land, the fields, the homes of a harsh corner of Scotland, early in the Twentieth Century as the agonies of the first World War loom. The drama tells of a young woman torn between her affection for the people and the land she has grown up with, and her longing for a wider life beyond. It is a story you will enjoy immensely for the next six weeks, and remember for a very long time. Be sure to tune in, starting tonight.

Sunset Song, Tonight, 9:00 Channel 13 PBS. Host: Alistair Cooke.

Some TV Violence Can Be Justified

Ellen Barber and David Harris in "The Scottsboro Boys"

What are the effects of violence shown on television? The question is as old as the medium itself. Definitive answers have yet to be devised. Given the demonstrated power of televison to sell products, it must be presumed that the medium can also "sell" ; and attitudes. And several isolated instances ı record that show how a specific televised violence was imitated in reality within a couple of the program. Law enforcement agencies and many ; and lawyers are convinced that there is a direct correlation between TV (and movies) and rising crime rates. Yet, the debates, pro and con, continue. The search for accurate measurements proves almost suspiciously elusive.

Elaborate sociological systems have been devised for the essential purpose of compiling pertinent data. But the methods of one system can differ significantly from those of another. Are all instances of televised violence to be considered equal in their impact? Some systems merely tabulate each instance of violence, making no distinctions as to context. Tom the Cat slamming Jerry the Mouse in a cartoon is made equal to some hoodlum roughing up Baretta in a weekly series. Eventually, however, such an approach must prove meaningless. Context must be considered, as two recent presentations have demonstrated. Both carried network advisory warnings.

"Helter Skelter," which recounted the gruesome story of convicted murderer Charles Manson and his mindless "family" of followers, generated an unusual amount of consternation before being broadcast a couple of weeks ago. Based on the best-selling book by Vincent Bugliosi, the Los Angeles prosecutor in the Manson case, the project was bound to raise understandable doubts among veteran observers of network programming.

The Manson case sold newspapers, magazines and books. And, no doubt, some alert CBS executives figured that a dramatization of the case would "sell" on television. In fact, it did. The two-part presentation of "Helter Skelter" attracted extremely large audiences; one even topped the Academy Awards broadcast, a standard blockbuster in the ratings. The easy conclusion: violence works. Yet, such a conclusion overlooks the fact that the TV dramatization was actually a carefully constructed and chillingly effective treatise against violence.

One critic, after a pre-screening of "Helter Skelter," urged the United Church of Christ to wage a campaign to keep the production off the air. The organization's Rev. Everett H. Parker sought the opinion of a second critic, who disagreed with the first but suggested that Dr. Parker himself see the film. CBS arranged a screening for Dr. Parker and several other church representatives. They unanimously agreed that "Helter Skelter," rather than exploiting aspects of violence, had been transformed into a responsible, cautionary tale for television.

"Judge Horton and the Scottsboro Boys," shown on NBC this past Thursday, was also based on fact. The 1931 case of nine black men accused of raping two white women in Alabama became one of the more sensational stories of the century. But, perhaps because the case demonstrably produced certain valuable side-effects, the TV treatment did not trigger objections among protectors of the public weal.

The dramatization opened with a group of young black men fending off an attack by young white men on a freight train. All of the participants are migrant hoboes. Two girls on the train accuse the black men of rape. In the first trial, all the defendants were found guilty and sentenced to death. After a successful appeal to the Supreme Court, a re-trial commenced in 1933, with Judge James E. Horton, a native of Alabama who proved loyal to the letter and spirit of the law at the expense of his career.

The TV production could certainly be accused of exploiting violence, directly, in the opening fight scene, or indirectly, in one of the girl's detailed descriptions of the supposed rapes. On the scale of automatic tabulation, the dramatization might be weighed among the more violent on the TV schedule. But consider the context. The script was dealing seriously with the American tragedy of blatant racism. It offered inspiring portraits of a judge from the South and a Jewish lawyer, Samuel Liebowitz, from New York. And it dealt intelligently and fairly with a case instrumental in establishing the rights of a defendant to counsel and to a jury of peers.

Violence does exist as a social problem, and both "Helter Skelter" and "Judge Horton and the Scottsboro Boys" attempted to comment on that problem with a rare degree of responsibility. To simply include them, without qualification, in the communal vat of TV violence is ridiculous. Of course, the fact that both programs carried warnings still says something about a medium that refuses to caution viewers about the frequently arbitrary and capricious depictions of violence in some of its action-adventure series. But that's another context.

Aargh! It's Emmy Awards Time Again

Did you know that the Emmy Awards will be announced on May 17? Can you wait? The National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences emerged from its respirator long enough last week to nominate 342 people, places and things for one serendipity or another, according to a scheme of categories and sub-categories that looks like the floorplan of General Amin's brain. High-level diplomatic negotiations are now in progress between the Academy and ABC. ABC will televise the awards ceremony but wants the number of winners cut down from 68 to 47, on the theory that the fewer winners there are around cluttering up the stage, the more room there will be for entertainment. Sixty-eight winners, ABC figures, would mean seven minutes of entertainment.

The Academy is understandably reluctant, believing, with Alexander Pope, that "One self-approving hour whole years outweighs/ Of stupid starers and of loud huzzahs." If you are not allowed to congratulate yourself, who will do it for you? The Academy has read its "Gnomologia": "When you die your trumpeter will be buried."

And the Academy, as usual, is passing some funny money. For one instance, of the 342 nominations, not one went to "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman." The official explanation is that "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" doesn't seem to fit into any of the categories; a "special classification" will be confected for it. The suspicion here, however, is that the Academy—and the networks—would prefer not having "Mary" in competition with the many sitcoms, daytime soaps and other syndicated programs to which it is manifestly superior. Such flimflam is not unprecedented. In 1972, after too many British programs beat out too many American ones for Emmys, the Academy revised its rules to avoid future mortification. A similar spirit of sportsmanship animated Little League baseball to declare Taiwan ineligible for its World Series because the Taiwanese insisted on winning.

For another instance, Lee Grant, whose "Fay" lasted just five weeks on NBC, has been nominated. Lee Grant is, of course, an accomplished actress, whose talents were mugged on "Fay." Thus she falls into the category of casualties on whom the Academy bestows a black kiss, after death. Others in this category have been Carl Betz, who won an Emmy after "Judd for the Defense" was cancelled; Hal Holbrook, who won one after his segment of "The Bold Ones" was cancelled; and the Smothers Brothers, whose writers won one after CBS was no longer amused. What is the Academy trying to tell us? Nominating Miss Grant is unimpressive quixotism. What Miss Grant might have done with her program is of less consequence than what, say, Louise Lasser did do with hers, if achievement is a criterion.

I, for one, can't wait until May 17, and should like to propose some anti-Emmys, or Enemas, in categories no more implausible than those the Academy has fabricated:

"Counterprogramming" Most Likely to Confirm Freud's Theory of the Death-Wish: NBC.

Bicentennial Programming Most Calculated to Make Us Wonder Whatever Happened to Will Rogers and Lenny Bruce (Longer Than One Minute): "Sandburg's Lincoln" on CBS. Special citation to seven episodes of "The Adams Chronicles."

Most Expensive Package That Turned Out to Be Empty, Except for Teeth: "Donny and Marie" on ABC. Special citation to "Mary's Dream."

Most Mindless Public Television Programming Decision: To chop up Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion" into two parts on two different nights. If public television assumes the American people can't stand three hours of some of the greatest music ever written, then we all belong in the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

Worst British Import: "Department S." Special citation to the last episode of "Upstairs, Downstairs."

Heaviest Blow to the Judaeo-Christian Tradition: "Sonny and Cher." Special citation to "Moses" with Burt Lancaster as the feisty patriarch.

Biggest Waste of Talent in a Continuing Series: Jack Warden in "Jigsaw John." Special citation to Lindsay Wagner in "Bionic Woman."

Continuing Insult to the Intelligence of Our Children: Everybody on Saturday morning except "Mister Rogers." Special citation to Channel 9 in New York City for reruns of "Wanted: Dead or Alive" at 9:00 A.M. They took all the violence out of the Family Viewing Period and put it where adults can't see it because we're asleep.

Continuing Insult to the Intelligence of Everybody: The Family Viewing Period.

Continuing Anomaly: Merv Griffin.

Continuing Embarrassment: The Emmy Awards.

the most moving epi- which occupies the sec- alf of the film, con- a cancer-ridden black er who is told, "There isn't any chance of He decides that "I'm onna die on account th," preaches a sermon ng, returns South with mily for one last look l, and at the end, with hildren playing at his e, "dies with dignity." ; three times I saw egment at previews, there were few dry eyes. It's the way many of us would like to face death and, regrettably, the way most of us won't.

If nothing else, "Dying" is one answer to commercial television's romantic obsession with medical miracles and the old complaint that Dr. Kildare needed "more terminal cancer patients and fewer love affairs," as the author Joyce Maynard has written. The film confronts death head on. But is this a new form of voyeurism? An invasion of privacy? Exploitation of the dying—or worse, an invitation to let the dying exploit themselves? Roemer is too sensitive, his camera too unobtrusive, to dwell on anguish for its own sake. And television aside, a century and more ago these questions would not have needed to be asked. In the sense that most people died at home, they were neither shielded from others nor shunned by them. Roemer has simply restored an audience.

As a public event, "Dying" sensitizes us to our own mortality, immunizing the healthy, in a small way, against the fear of death at a time when man dies "existentially," face to the wall, not quite sure who he is or where he is going. Far from being the adventure it once was, ceremoniously arranged and socially launched, death today is an enigma turned over to the professionals. When the crisis comes, Dr. Melvin Krant, the medical advisor for this film has stated elsewhere, "The chaplain is pushed out of the room and the resuscitator is wheeled in." Because modern medicine programs us to die in silence, anyone who has rehearsed some parting advice for posterity should make every effort to die at home.

This, then, is the implicit social context that makes "Dying," in many ways, a searching and resonant film. Roemer shows us what the EEGs and the lab reports don't. Unintended, perhaps, is the role that television itself plays in adding a new ritual to the high-technology dying of our age. Ironically, in this case, it becomes a new kind of life-support machine—one that gives the patient, if not restored health, at least an outlet for what remains of his humanity. It's a way of publicly saying goodbye.

Yet, one of the flaws in "Dying" is a lack of outside perspective. Originally, the film was to be framed between an opening and concluding section that would have alerted viewers to some of the reasons why the subject of death today is being moved from the deep freeze into the living room. But this idea was abandoned in favor of a ten-minute segment by Prof. Maynard Mack of Yale University, who tells us why we are not going to see what obviously has been omitted. I find this rather awkward. Without theoretical cues, "Dying" seems episodic and themeless; it is a film that comes across more strongly on a second viewing. My advice to anyone looking for a theme in this work is to regard it as an unfinished exploration of a subject that is only beginning to be seriously studied.

"Dying" tells us that although there is no easy way to confront one's death, there may be good and bad ways that have as much to do with social attitudes as with medical practice. The film dramatizes beautifully the human factors that mitigate the anguish of both the patient and those who care for him. In this respect, the first three episodes should be looked upon as preludes to the last, which is clearly the cap sheaf on the shock. And shock it will, not because it is painful to watch but because it isn't. As a counterstatement to Jessica Mitford, it is an unabashed plea for death as ritual—for the emotionalism of grief, for the open casket, for kissing the corpse, among other things.

Such theatrical elements will, I suspect, be unsettling for many viewers who prefer to deal with their anxieties in more rational and less "barbaric" ways. In touching the atrophied nerve of religious faith, the scene suggests that a gift to the Eye Bank is not necessarily a good substitute for the idea of transcendence or the memorial service for the funeral. And as an "ethnic" approach that challenges the white, middle-class tendency to hold death at arm's length, it offers an ideal both comforting and disturbing. Through this black minister, dying is seen as an act of fundamental faith, a tribute to the necessary illusion that gives man a final identity. Few of us can make this backward leap. One physician-thanatologist with whom I saw the program remarked, "You simply won't get the bulk of the white population to die in this fashion."

Yet, "Dying" is no plea for euthanasia or the "right to die." On the contrary, it argues, by implication at least, for the will to live. And although seeing the film won't make death any more welcome, it does help us understand this last and greatest of life's crises by asking us to die a little ourselves. ■

"A couple is plunged into discord by the husband's fatal illness. Death is the intruder, but the wife is the problem."

Can New York Save the Schomburg Center?

No one is asking whether New York is anything more than a debt structure or a credit rating these days, and what, precisely, is being saved from a fate worse than default. One has the feeling that the money men at City Hall are dealing in fiscal card tricks—not in a place. ...its being made hurt most heartbreakingly and ...diately in human services. But where they are going ...t the worst, in the long run, is in their damage to ...sential nature and quality of the city—those areas ...and commerce, culture and communication, that give ...ork its traditional style and strength and that provide ...petitive edge for business, talent, leadership and ... This truth occasionally glimmers through the dismal ...igures: it is the city's real bottom line.

...e constituent elements that feed into that bottom ...ow have the very lowest priority. It is disturbing ... that one must apologize for speaking up for art ...ture—although it is the quality of the city's life ...imately establishes New York's appeal and prosperity, ...in turn support its social services. Its creative culture ...humanity are closely linked.

...hat is why it is so distressing to write about what ...pening to the Schomburg Center, the internationally ... collection that is the world's most comprehensive ...tinguished documentation of black history, literature ...t. The Schomburg Collection is both splendid and ...ic. It has just celebrated its 50th anniversary in the ...York Public Library in Harlem at 103 West 135th ... The original collection brought together by Arnold ...burg was acquired for the Library in 1925, with a ...ge grant of $10,000. Today it includes books, ...cripts, periodicals, clippings, photographs, tapes, ..., motion pictures, microfilm, archives, art and artifacts.

...o visit the Schomburg in its 1905 McKim, Mead and ... building and the 1940 Countee Cullen branch that ...cts through from 136th Street, is to be assaulted by ...and despair. The care and determination with which ...emarkable resource is nurtured and protected by ...Hutson, director of the Center, is an obvious cause ...y. The conditions in which she struggles for ...vation against an ever-increasing avalanche of ...ions (the collection doubles every 10 years with no ...ase funds at all) defy credibility.

...here is no air-conditioning and no humidity control; ...ets too hot or too cold union regulations simply ...f all work. That's fine for people but not so great ...iceless documents. Acquisitions wait in string-tied ...ed piles on the floor. Book stacks are double-ranged ...t the walls where floors are strongest; the building ...ike no additional loads. Often there are not enough ... in the one reading room, which is an even 80 degrees ...ter and higher in summer. Thirty thousand visitors ...every year.

...ven with these incredible conditions, the Schomburg ...ace where you want to linger. There is a sense of ...as friends, of treasures to be enjoyed and discoveries ...made, that has led young New Yorkers (the ...uished educator, Kenneth Clark, for example, ...ded by Arthur Schomburg many years ago) to ...g and self-knowledge.

...e Schomburg Center was designated a Research ...y (it was formerly a Branch Library) in 1972, joining ...esearch facilities as the Science and Technology Center ... Street and the Performing Arts Research Center at ...n Center. Its support comes from the underfunded ...derstaffed Public Library system, New York State ...ional funds, matching grants from the National ...ment for the Humanities, and private donations. ...akes it possible to bring a staff of six up to 40, ...talogue and microfilm records and archives, and to ...e and preserve the most fragile materials. But it is ...g battle.

...he real tragedy of this story—if it were not disturbing ...h—is that the Schomburg had just come within an ...h of salvation when financial disaster hit New York. ...six years of planning for a desperately needed new ...g, the project was almost home. It had taken two ...of complicated contractual negotiations with the city, ...he firm of Bond, Ryder and Associates had been ...ed as architects in 1972-3. (There was an earlier, ...ent, privately commissioned scheme by Roger Glasgow ...id not go ahead for a variety of reasons.)

...he work on phase one of the contract—a master ...nd library design—was almost finished when ...rophe struck. In August, 1975, when it was being ...ed by the Bureau of the Budget, the whole project ... disappeared. The budget item for construction was ...ed, and in October, the city cancelled the ...cts' contract for lack of funds.

...is is even more unfortunate because Bond, Ryder ...me up with a very good scheme. First, they had changed ...ogram they were given from a large demolition ... building project to something far more sensitive and ...le by calculating the future maintenance and staffing ...e what would have been an overambitious museum ...rary combination. They cut down the museum ... and suggested that the McKim, Mead and White ...g be saved and recycled for the art and artifacts ...s. The process was started for having the old ...g placed on the National Register, which would make ...ble for Federal rehabilitation funds.

...e new building was to be on Lenox Avenue, with ...n, arcaded front, and the new and old buildings ...o be connected by a garden court within the block. ...ce core for elevators, air-conditioning, etc., would ... the old structure's party wall. It is a simple, ...l design, rich in neighborhood amenity, at once ...nical and potentially elegant. Its loss is incalculable ... collection, the city and the local community.

...ere are money losses as well, both in design costs to ...d in land acquisition. The city has already purchased ...perty reaching from the library buildings on ...nd 136th Streets to Lenox Avenue and all along the ... itself, and relocated most of the tenants. Those ...es stand empty now, boarded up and off the ...ls, blighting the neighborhood and inviting vandalism. ...have been three fires so far, close enough to the ...burg to be hideously frightening. # Jean Hélion's Uncertain Shift to Representation

"Scene Journaliere" suggests the work of an abstract painter.

The art of the French painter Jean Hélion is, even to someone sympathetic to its special quality, something of a conundrum. Mr. Hélion is obviously an immensely gifted artist, and his long career—he has just observed his 74th birthday—is one of the most interesting of his generation. In the 1930's, he was probably the best native-born abstract painter in Paris. He is also an accomplished writer, and not only about art—his book about his experiences in World War II, "They Shall Not Have Me," was published in New York in 1943. It was during the war years that his painting underwent a decisive change. "What he saw outside the window of his studio was more real, he said, than what was inside," as John Ashbery reports in his foreword to the catalogue of Mr. Hélion's current exhibition at Spencer A. Samuels & Company. The votary of abstraction became a representational painter specializing in the materials of everyday life.

But it is not this shift from abstraction to representation that is the really puzzling thing about Mr. Hélion's work. Many artists have followed a similar course without permanently confounding their admirers. What remains mysterious about Mr. Hélion is not his change of style but a change in the quality of the confidence that he brought to it. The shift from abstraction to representation seems to have been accompanied by a no less fateful change from certainty to uncertainty. Total confidence in what Mr. Hélion himself once described as "the absolute" was succeeded by something more tentative and questioning, an attitude of grave humility and painstaking search.

One can only guess at some of the reasons for this aura of doubt and hesitation that characterizes so much of Mr. Hélion's representational work. The painter who abandons the absoluteness of abstraction for the observation of everyday life finds himself in a world of infinite possibility, without fixed boundaries or stable subjects. He is obliged to reinvent, so to speak, the very terms of his art. He is obliged, too, to look to the museums—to the old masters—for guidance and inspiration, and this necessarily places his art and his whole sense of vocation against the historical grain of the period in which he works. It means, among much else, that the artist becomes, perforce, an anti-modernist, and thus invites us to judge his work by a standard—the standard of the museum masterwork—he is unlikely to meet.

If there is something heroic in this effort to recover and revitalize "tradition" out of the materials of workaday observation—and I believe there is—there is also something about it that guarantees, if not defeat, then that very air of tentativeness and groping I have already mentioned. To put the matter bluntly, there is something about it that forestalls great expectations. For the artist sets out to accomplish something, in isolation and piecemeal, that in past ages was vigorously supported by entire "schools" representing the uncontested values of a whole civilization.

There are nearly 70 items in Mr. Hélion's exhibition at Samuels, most of them small—drawings and oil sketches—and most of them produced in the last 33 years, the period since his "conversion" to representation. We are given enough of a glimpse of his abstract paintings of the 1930's to see how marvelously accomplished he was in that vein—a small black painting from 1933 (not listed in the catalogue) and the "Abstraction Verte" of 1937 are the outstanding pictures in this section of the show—but one would have to have seen the 1967 exhibition at the Willard Gallery for a real understanding of Mr. Hélion's abstract art. (There is also a fine example in the current exhibition at the Guggenheim Museum.) The main focus of the show is on the development of Mr. Helion's representational painting.

What is interesting about this development is the extent to which, in its early stages, it remained so evidently dependent upon the manner—the tight, hard forms and firmly drawn contours—of the abstract painting that preceded it. To this transitional period—from 1943 to around 1950—belong some of the best examples of Mr. Hélion's figurative art. As an abstract painter, he had derived much from Léger, and he was able to put this lesson to good use in his early paintings of the figure. The "Homme au Chapeau" (1943) is, indeed, a little masterpiece, and the large street scene called "Scene Journalière" (1947), though a little too cold, too completely rationalized, for my taste, is nonetheless the kind of picture that only a very good painter could produce.

Almost everything about this "Scène Journalière," however—everything except its imagery—identifies it as the work of an abstract painter, of a painter who has not yet in practice, whatever he may believe in theory, abandoned the syntax of abstraction for the hazards of immediate observation. It is when the artist begins in earnest to base his art on those hazards that the problems begin, that the note of uncertainty begins to insinuate itself into every touch of the brush and every form in the composition. There are paintings—or more frequently, sketches for paintings—of lovers in the street, of figures in the doorways of bookshops, of street musicians playing in front of a shop window, of a woman dressing in front of the fireplace, but they are rarely completed. Certain subjects are returned to, again and again, often on a single canvas, and we are expected—apparently—to be more interested in the process of painting than in the result.

These later pictures are freer, more painterly, more spontaneous, than the earlier works, but they nonetheless suggest something studied; they do not have the quality of the immediacy they affect. Occasionally something masterly emerges from all this studied groping: The little picture called "La Révolution" (1968), depicting scenes from the 1968 upheavals in Paris, is a brilliant evocation not only of its subject but of a whole tradition of history painting and battle scenes. In that little picture, Mr. Hélion brings the culture of the museums into vigorous alignment with his observation of contemporary life—something that he rarely accomplishes elsewhere in the exhibition.

Otherwise, the best of the show is in the drawings. In them, at least, the emotion is always fresh, the observation exact, and the effect exhilarating. We no longer feel, as we do in so many of the later paintings, that the artist has had to expend much of his energy in freeing himself of the straitjacket of abstraction. It is in the drawings that Mr. Hélion has liberated himself at last from "the absolute."

It is not a small accomplishment, but it remains oddly puzzling. The high confidence of the 1930's was never recaptured. The effort to paint "what we see"—as Mr. Hélion once described it—turned into a protracted preoccupation with pictorial process, which had the effect of negating the very object it pursued.

The Power and Delicacy Of Chinese Landscapes

By JOHN CANADAY

New York offers at the moment a couple of exhibitions of Chinese landscape painting, "Listening to the Bamboo: The Art of Wen Cheng-ming" at Asia House and "Summer Mountains: The Eternal Landscape" at the Metropolitan Museum. These shows are, respectively, a delight and a disappointment. The disappointment, however, has a consolation in the form of an absolutely beautiful book attached to it.

It isn't often that an illustrated book is more revealing then an exhibition of the original painting with which it is concerned, but that's the way it is in the case of "Summer Mountains." The same majestic landscape, painted about 1050 by one Ch'ü Ting, in the opinion of Wen Fong, the Metropolitan's consultant on Far Eastern art, is the centerpiece of both the book and the exhibition, but in the book you virtually hold this length of ancient silk in your hands, enjoying it bit by bit, while the original is simply exposed for inspection, becoming a specimen for analysis rather than a philosophical statement and an esthetic delight.

To be fair, the exhibition is apparently a last-minute idea conceived as a corollary to the museum's publication of the book, but after a second visit to verify a first impression, I found the installation unworthy of its inspiration. Peter Oldenburg's design of the book, open and airy and clear, is as appropriate to the subject as the claustrophobic installation is disastrous.

As for Mr. Fong's text, there is no other form of art in which attributions of date and authorship mean more to scholars and less to everybody else than in Chinese landscape painting, and at this stage of the game I am willing to settle for the pleasure the paintings give me and leave scholarly disputes (simmering just now on the attribution of "Summer Mountains") to the scholars. Mr. Fong's text is directed to the layman and is at the very least an economical summary of an exhaustibly complicated subject, spotted with descriptions that stimulate a Westerner's understanding of what Chinese ink technique is all about. (In one instance, the vision of landscape is "wrestled" from the silk surface.)

For those who lack an opportunity to visit Asia House to see "Listening to the Bamboo," the monograph on the painter Wen Cheng-ming by Richard Edwards that serves as a catalogue is an excellent substitute, and in connection with the exhibition it is enormously enlightening in its clarification of the narrative details and the philosophical spirit suggested by a model installation. The installation of "Listening to the Bamboo" is determined by a sympathetic knowledge of the subject. Part of its effectiveness lies in its inconspicuousness; nothing is forced, everything is revealed with a simplicity and elegance that matches the gentle spirit of paintings by a scholar-poet. The disciplines to which that spirit was subjected and the subtleties beneath its apparently simple expressions are apparent only when the text is read in connection with the paintings (which are very well illustrated in the book), but simply at face value for the average spectator these are delightful pictures that should put the lie to anyone's objection that all Chinese landscape paintings look alike.

Wen Cheng-ming was born in 1470 and worked during the first 60 years of the 16th century, which was getting along toward late in the game for China. It is a peculiarity of Chinese painting that to work in historical styles did not make an artist vulnerable to the word we have made so dreadful as an accusation of parasitism, "derivative," but, rather, was a test of skill by which the past was not a dead weight but a source of inspiration, and scholarly acquaintance with tradition served as a release for individual genius. Thus Wen Chenming worked in a variety of manners, including the majestic tradition of "Summer Mountains," painted nearly five centuries earlier, yet invested each with his special combination of learn-

Mark Tobey —More Complex Than We Think

Justice is being done at Knoedler to one of the most complex American painters of this century: Mark Tobey. Fifteen years ago Tobey was thought of in Europe as the most famous American painter since Whistler. He had won a major prize at the Venice Biennale in 1958, he had had a particularly successful show at the Musée des Arts Décoratifs in Paris and—importantly—he lived in Europe. The New York School had been seen in Europe, but it had not yet taken hold. The seraphic intimations of Mark Tobey were all the rage.

Tobey at the time had just turned 70. He had earned his living as an artist since 1915 or thereabouts, and he had earned it in all kinds of ways: as a caricaturist, as a news-illustrator, as the portraitist of people much talked about, as a muralist. But his new, solid, lasting fame was owed to abstract paintings in which a delicate continuous line wove itself in and out of a shifting cloud bank of color. People read these pictures as portraits of ecstacy, and ecstacy at that time was in short supply.

Tobey was more complicated than that, but it was convenient to simplify. When more flamboyant forms of American painting became all the rage, Tobey did not so much sink in the general esteem as vanish temporarily from view. More especially, it was forgotten that Tobey in the 1930's had proved himself a most gifted observer of the metropolitan scene, and one could characterize a complete world as concisely as a first-rate novelist. For this otherworldly and at times almost wraith-like figure was never happier than with the rough-talking, unsubdued population of the market in Seattle; nor did the courteous old gentleman who lived in one of the noblest houses in Basel, Switzerland, ever lose his keen eye for the follies and frailties of the rich, the pompous and the overdressed.

All this comes out at Knoedler, where for the first time in many years the New York public can see the full range of Tobey's achievement—from the tall, slender, tempera panels which people think of as "typical Tobey" to the thumbnail notations of people and animals who took his fancy and the full-dress portrait drawings which speak for his allegiance to the draftsmen of the turn of the century. There are the many-tiered architectural visions in which robed figures go through mysterious and undefined rituals; and there is the "E Pluribus Unum," which sets down once and for all the truth about certain aspects of Seattle. And just when we think we have the measure of Tobey, there are paintings like the "Girls in Blue" of 1933 to make us eat our words. This show does us all a service, and the catalogue with its long foreword by John Ashbery is a steal at $3.

One of the best young sculptors around is Charles Fahlen, whose new work is on show at J. H. Duffy and Sons. It is the mark of a real sculptor that he seems to re-invent his materials; and this is exactly what Fahlen does to as strange a gamut of substances as we have lately seen. (Investigators have found among them papier mâché, roof cement, and more than one kind of plastic). When Fahlen wants them to sing out together he doesn't twist them into outlandish shapes. Still less does he devise for them environments of an anthropomorphic or biomorphic sort. He just uses the kind of all-purpose metal hinges that we can buy in any hardware store, and with these hinges he gets the materials to tilt this way and that until we forget their everyday identities and think of them as elements in a conversation that is most intelligently carried on.

Work of this kind resolutely eschews associations of the kind which sculptors were once only too happy to welcome into their work. Architecture, mythology, the implications of a particular kind of human physique—none of these plays a part. Yet sometimes they get in uninvited, just as they get into Mon Levinson's new work at the Rosa Esman Gallery.

Miss Levinson works with heavy, rough-edged sheets of paper which she colors by dipping them into substances both usual (ink, acrylic paints) and unusual (tea and coffee, reputedly). Not unexpectedly, the color runs, oozes and suddenly peters out. When the result is hung up as a flat sheet, framed, on the wall, it looks rather like a watercolor that has been left out in the rain; and nothing of much consequence is said.

But when the sheets form up as a mural that curls off the wall, piece by piece, or as the pages of a book as yet unprinted that hangs open in a tall narrow case, then the experience is altogether more rewarding. The third dimension thickens the plot, in other words, and we fall to thinking of all the ways in which we have been affected by ancient sheets of paper which have been colored by our forefathers and discolored by time.

"Literature!" some people may say, with the particular tincture of scorn that that word carries with it in dull minds. But there are very few things in the world that don't somehow remind us of something else. Literature in the stricter sense—reading matter of an ambitious sort, that is to say—can be found in abundance in William T. Wiley's new show at the Frumkin Gallery. Wiley is a California artist who draws, paints, writes and constructs with equal facility. His work has in it something of cartooning, something of the spoken anecdote that happens to have been written down, and something of the wild way with materials that was pioneered by the Dadaists 60 years ago.

Wiley is what his admirers call "a backyard cowboy": someone who dreams of one day shooting up the big city but meanwhile is quite happy in dreamland. He does go on and on, but if we are patient and wait long enough for the really funny bits, we end up having ourselves quite a good time.

ing and intimacy, of power and delicacy, of universal statement and personal sentiment.

The titles of his paintings—"Listening to the Bamboo" is one of them—are indications of his prevailing mood, peaceful and sometimes tinged with melancholy: "Leisurely Living at the Stream Pavilion," "Scholar Fishing," "Scholars Meeting by Old Trees," "Brewing Tea on a Spring Evening," "Tasting Tea in the Pure Shade," and, in his old age, "Awaiting Snow in Winter" and the poignant "Old Trees by a Wintry Brook," all these in styles ranging from convoluted descriptions to economical notations.

Whatever their style, Wen Cheng-ming's lands were meditations in his character of artist, poe scholar, essentially pat expressions intended fo et enjoyment. # The Seven Basic Herbs

SWEET BASIL.

By RUTH TIRRELL

Thyme, sage and winter savory, lemon balm and apple mint, basil and dill, these are the seven "magic" herbs I can't do without.

Winter savory, thyme and even sage are practically evergreen; their time of harvest is almost year-round. I picked sage in bitter cold for the Thanksgiving turkey and dug under deep snow in January for savory and thyme. (I knew where to dig but stakes can mark the spot.) The fresh leaves taste better but, for convenience, I use dried leaves, too, in winter, especially sage. Economical dishes—meat loaf, hash, chicken stew, bean casseroles—would seem plain and dull without these herbs, often all three at once.

Sage seems reliably hardy but savory and thyme might winterkill in rich soil or a poorly drained site. A hay mulch soaks up excess moisture and prevents frostbitten leaves. In spring, shear back the shaggy foliage of savory and thyme to promote tender new growth. Cut back sage only one third, or else it may not bloom.

To start: set out young nursery plants in spring. Or —less costly—sow seed.

Sage germinates readily, but the fine seed of savory and thyme may need a protected sowing in a flat inside, and even so, come up slowly. Savory and thyme do best in full sun in rather sparse dry stony soil. Sage thrives in ordinary garden soil, in sun or partial shade.

Like most perennials, the three herbs need renewal every few years. Dig out old woody growth of thyme, divide and reset root divisions, or let self-sown seedlings fill in. Winter savory, especially, loses vitality with age. Make new plants of root divisions or rooted cuttings. As for sage, I like the looks of an old spreading plant, but young plants have proportionately more tender growth. Shoots will root readily.

My thymes are Mother-of-Thyme [Thymus serpyllum] or wild thyme, which forms a creeping mat in a gravelly area, and lemon thyme [T. citriodorus], a bushy plant which spreads on a bank. There are many more kinds, all with small aromatic leaves, green or grayish. All make excellent groundcovers for poor soil. Their flowers—red, pink, blue, white, depending on variety—attract bees to a garden.

Garden sage [Salvia officinalis], the conventional seasoning herb, is also a handsome shrubby plant with gray leaves of pebbled texture and blue-purple flowers. Purple Sage is even handsomer and the royal-colored leaves just as useful.

The Costly Joys of Horsemanship

By LYNNE W. SCANLON

Anyone who has ever owned or ridden a horse or a pony knows that horseback riding is an exhilarating activity for children as well as adults. A horse provides a youngster with an outlet for affection, in addition to serving as a testing ground for his or her growing physical skills. For adults, the challenge is more often that of developing patience, skill, a bit of daring, and an instinct about how a horse will perform in a variety of situations.

Unfortunately, owning and riding a horse these days has become increasingly difficult. As rural areas have become suburban areas, and suburban areas have become practically urban, space for riding and stabling horses has decreased drastically while prices have spiraled upward.

As Jackie Rogers Edel, a freelance riding instructor in Norwalk, Conn. who used to teach horsemanship at the Fairfield Hunt Club says, "It's now next to impossible to buy a well-mannered, sound horse for less than $1,000. Fifteen hundred dollars is probably a more realistic figure for the kind of horse the average rider really wants." And this doesn't take into account the inflated cost of feeding, caring for and equipping a horse today.

However, there are ways one can cut the cost of owning or riding a horse. The most obvious is simply to rent a horse on an hourly basis. Rates vary from $5 to $10 per hour, depending on the area, and on the quality of the horses. Lessons range from $7.50 an hour for group lessons, to $20 an hour for private lessons from a well-known instructor.

Another approach, less frequently used because most people are unaware of it, is to lease a horse on a monthly basis just during those seasons that are most conducive to pleasant riding—summer and fall. Van Cortlandt Park Stables at Broadway and West 254th Street charges $124 a month. Claremont Riding Academy at 175 West 89th Street charges $250; and Clove Lake Stables on Staten Island charges $400 (these were last year's prices). Stables that lease horses can be looked up in the Yellow Pages.

An even less obvious approach is to care for a "boarded" horse while its owners are away on a summer vacation, or while their children are away at camp or school. Anyone who rides frequently at one stable can spread the word that he is interested in assuming the financial responsibility of a horse for a few months, or that he is willing to exercise a horse several times a week when the owner is not available. Riders who are shy about approaching a horseowner directly can ask

New Life for Old Snapshots

Most people know how fascinating it is to see their favorite slides projected on a large screen so that even the tiniest detail is enlarged with startling clarity, and so that all present can view each picture simultaneously.

Yet many do not realize they can achieve this same effect with all of those old family snapshots that are hidden inside large cumbersome albums, or tucked away in drawers, or shoeboxes on a closet shelf. With comparatively little time and effort many of these pictures can be converted to slides—thus making them much easier to view, and thus greatly simplifying storage and filing problems (slides are smaller than prints and they can be neatly stored in compact trays or file cabinets that also make it much simpler to find specific pictures when desired).

In addition, this project will enable the photographer to use automatic projectors which greatly simplify showing the pictures to an audience, and there are numerous creative improvements or special effects that can be added to enhance viewing pleasure.

For the actual job of converting these snapshots to slides the first item that will be needed is a set of supplementary closeup lenses to fit on over the regular camera lens so that closeup copies can be made of each snapshot (these are available for use with most 35mm cameras), or a bellows attachment for the camera that will enable one to do even closer work (including enlarging part of the original picture or cropping for interesting effects).

The best film to use for this purpose is Kodak Panatomic-X, a black-and-white, fine grain negative material. When this film is developed in Kodak's Direct Positive Film Developing Kit (available from most large camera stores, or on special order from any local dealer), the negative image that normally results is reversed during development so as to produce black-and-white transparencies (slides) that will be ideal for projection.

The snapshot to be copied is placed face up on a table or other flat horizontal surface, then a pane of clear, clean glass, large enough to cover the entire photograph and heavy enough to keep the print flat, is placed on top. This avoids fuzzy corners, or out of focus problems. This part of the procedure can be done outdoors by using daylight illumination, or indoors with artificial lighting. In either case, select the fastest shutter speed that light conditions will allow to avoid blurred images caused by camera movement, unless a tripod is being used.

When using artificial light indoors, position two lamps, each about one foot away from the picture, so that each shines down at about a 45-degree angle to the surface of the picture. If possible, use photoflood bulbs in the fixtures, rather than regular bulbs since these will give sufficient illumination for handholding the camera during exposure. There is one thing that must be remembered about the film speed rating when determining exposure: Panatomic-X is normally rated at A.S.A. 32, but for this process, Kodak recommends a rating of A.S.A. 80 for outdoor exposures, or A.S.A. 64 for artificial light.

After the film is properly exposed it is processed in the Kodak Direct Positive Developing Kit. This kit contains a developer, a bleach, a clearing bath, and a second developer called the redeveloper. The only other chemical needed is a package of standard fixing solution or hypo that is obtainable from any dealer. The film is developed in the first developer according to the directions furnished, then rinsed in water, bleached and treated in the clearing solution. It is then redeveloped in the redeveloper (which changes the negative image to a positive one) then rinsed in clear water and fixed in the fixing bath. The film should be washed in running water for 20 minutes, and then air-dried in a dust-free location.

Temperatures are not really critical during any of these steps, since processing can be done at temperatures of from 68 degrees F. (18 degrees C.) to 75 degrees F. (29 degrees C.). The entire processing procedure should take only about one hour, and when complete the end result will be a roll of black-and-white positive transparencies that can be used as slides as soon as they are mounted.

Various types of mounts are sold for this purpose in almost every camera store. Made of metal, plastic or cardboard, they come with or without glass. As a rule, most people will find that the plastic mounts are simplest to work with, and by buying those that do not use glass the enthusiast eliminates the problem of possible breakage and the need for tedious cleaning of each piece of glass on the inside before assembling the mount.

Those who would like to do some creative work on their new slides can add color to them (before mounting, of course) by treating individual slides with a toning solution. For example, toning portraits or pictures of people in a sepia toner will give them an old fashioned "nostalgic" look. Blue toner is great for snow scenes and water scenes, and green gives an interesting effect on landscapes and rural scenes. A really dramatic impact can also be added to sunrises and sunsets with a red toner. Other variations include making montages and collages from duplicate copies of some slides, then recopying these on a single slide. To soften the lines of harshly lit or overly contrasty pictures one can tie a piece of old nylon stocking or fine mesh screening material over the taking lens on the camera. Titles can be added with a soft tip pen—for example, "Our Trip To Patagonia," "Intermission," or even "The End."

For a really professional touch one can tape a musical background which can be timed to synchronize with the slide show, and a personal taped commentary can also be added to supplement the slide titles. The only thing left to do when the guests have gathered and the lights have been dimmed is to set the projector on automatic, sit down, relax, and enjoy the show. ■

Some Prefer to Draw Their Own Rules

LAS PALMAS, Canary Islands

There are duels that continue over a period of years, one player championing a particular variation and his opponent contesting it in a stubbornly fixed way. If they happen not to draw the right colors against each other in any given tournament, they patiently postpone the dogmatic challenge and renew it at the first opportunity.

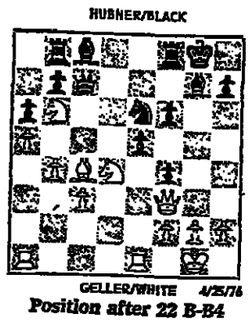
Meanwhile, the theory of the variation may undergo change quite apart from the hard-bitten predilections of the two players involved in the duel. Nevertheless, such antagonists have been known to ignore the latest popular opinion in favor of fighting on their favorite terms.

That's what transpired in the game between the Soviet grandmaster Efim Geller and the West German grandmaster Robert Hübner in the first round of the fifth Las Palmas International Tournament.

Although it is now held that White's most promising set-up is 6 N-QB3, B-N2; 7 B-K3, Geller felt constrained to adopt 6 O-O and 7 P-QB3, if for no other reason than that he had lost one previous game and drawn another with it against Hübner. It was thus a question of honor.

While Geller's 9 P-QR4 and 11 P-R5 restrained Hübner from obtaining an aggressive development with . . . P-QN4 and . . . B-QN2, his 12 N-B4 made no effort to impede the center advance 12 . . . P-Q4, knocking out the KP after 13 PxP, NxP. Geller was relying on mobile piece play even without a supporting pawn center.

HUBNER/BLACK



GELLER/WHITE 4/25/76

Position after 22 B-B4

After the game, Hübner blamed his 14 . . . N-B4 for his difficulties, suggesting that he should have eliminated one of Geller's well-posted knights by 14 . . . N-K4; 15 NxN, BxN.

His 16 . . . P-K4 may have looked good superficially, but after 17 Q-B3! he could not support his knight by 17 . . . R-Q1 because of 18 NxP! PxN; 19 BxR, QxB; 20 B-B4, PxN; 21 BxNch, K-R1; 22 PxP, N-Q2; 23 Q-B7, N-B3; 24 R-K7, Q-B1; 25 BxP. White would then have had a winning ending with rook plus three pawns for two minor pieces. In this hypothetical line, 18 . . . P-KN4 collapses against 19 B-B4, Q-Q3; 20 BxNP, PxB; 21 N-B7.

After 17 . . . N-B5; 18 N-N6, R-N1; 19 B-N3, P-N4; 20, BxN, NPxB, however, Geller had weakened the black pawn formation and worse yet, there was no good answer to his 21 P-QN4! Hübner would have lost the exchange on 21 . . . N-Q2; 22 N-K6, while the alternative 21 . . . PxN; 22 PxN, PxP; 23 QxQBP would have given Black terrible problems in developing his QB. For example, 23 . . . B-N5; 24 N-Q5, Q-Q1; 25 NxP costs a pawn with nothing to show for it.

But Geller pounced on 21 . . . N-K3 by 22 B-B4! with a powerful pin; it would have done Hübner no good to go into 22 . . . PxN; 23 PxP, R-K1; 24 P-Q5!, because Black would then not even have had breathing room. Instead, his 22 . . . R-K1 dropped the exchange after 23 NxB, QxB; 24 N-Q6 and, although he struggled on to the time control before resigning, he never had a chance to pull out the game.

OVER 3,700 LOTS TO BE AUCTIONED IN STOLOW'S MAY 24-28, JUNE 1, 1976 SALE

The J&H Stolow auction sale of May 24-28, June 1, 1976, will include over 3,700 lots with a total catalogue value in excess of $800,000.00!

Collectors of U.S. will find over 1,450 lots, with emphasis on choice commemorative plate number blocks and blocks of four such as: Columbian plate number blocks of 6 from 1¢ to 5¢; Trans-Mississippi plate number blocks of 6 from 1¢ to 10¢; Louisiana Purchase plate number blocks from 1¢ to 10¢; Jamestown plate number blocks; and Panama-Pacific plate number blocks, both perforation varieties, including the elusive 400A. All of these blocks are remarkably fresh, with beautiful centering and never hinged. Also offered are fine selections of reprints and reissues, a vast selection of Columbian and Trans-Mississippi singles and blocks of 4. Large selections of later day plate blocks, both commemorative and airmails, are also listed.

This sale includes a specialized offering of over 500 lots of France, concentrating on the 19th Century. Condition is unusually high, including a large group of re-issues, tete-beche pairs, covers, cancellations, etc.—a very beautiful assemblage.

Also to be found in this sale are topical collections, world-wide collections, and approval dealers stocks broken down into small units. The deluxe, fully illustrated catalogue for this sale, and future sales, can be obtained FREE OF CHARGE, simply by requesting it from the Auction Department.

U.N., Canada Note Habitat Conferen[ce]

The United Nations and Canada are both issuing commemoratives focusing attention on a world conference next month that will seek to cope with the problems of growing numbers of people living in an urbanized environment.

"Habitat: the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements," is the formal title of the international parley, which is being held from May 29 to June 11 in the Canadian West Coast city of Vancouver. The parley is the urban equivalent of the Stockholm U.N. conference in 1972 on the natural environment.

In what is likely to be the largest U.N. conference ever held, more than 6,000 delegates from 125 nations will gather in Vancouver to take up the prospect that the population of the world will double by the year 2000, adding three and a half billion people to the human family, with urban areas having to absorb most of the new millions.

To accommodate the new millions that will populate cities and towns means the creation of the equivalent of 3,500 cities of 1,000,000 inhabitants each. In the world today there are still fewer than 300 cities with one million population. Experts talk of a city in India growing to 30,000,000 people, and of Tokyo having more inhabitants than all of Canada by 1985. Over the next quarter century, more buildings will be required than humans have erected in history.

Already, the world's cities and towns are in crisis or near crisis, failing to provide basic facilities and services, coping with problems of congestion, slums, unemployment, crime, pollution, disease and inadequate transportation. And as the young and the educated throng to the cities, rural areas are losing vigor and developing nations are increasingly faced by inadequate food and energy, increasing idleness and illiteracy.

The goal of the Habitat conference is to re-evaluate all the elements of the global structure and to seek new techniques, new ideas and new forms of social organization.

The U.N. is issuing a set of four stamps, all in five colors, for Habitat. Two, in denominations of 13 cents and 25 cents, are for use at the world organization's headquarters in New York City. Two, in Swiss currency, in denominations of 40 centimes and 1.50 francs, are for use at the U.N.'s European headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. The U.S. equivalent of the Swiss denominations is 16 cents and 59 cents, subject to rate fluctuations. The issue is being put out on May 28.

The common design, by Eliezer Weishoff of Israel, depicts the globe encircled by repsesentations of houses, with the five official languages of the U.N. forming a frame. Below the frame are the denomination and the event being commemorated.

Information about mint stamps and first-day covers of the new set of four is available from the U.N. Postal Administration, P.O. Box 5900, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10017.

On Oct. 8 the U.N. will issue a set of four commemoratives to mark its 25th anniversary. The stamps will differ from all other U.N. stamps of the past by being printed in sheets of 20 instead of the customary 50. Like the Habitat issue, two will be for use in New York and two for use in Geneva.

Canada is issuing a single 20-cent horizontal commemorative designed by I. A. R. MacLeod of Ottawa and printed in four-color lithography. The issue date of this Canadian stamp is May 12.

The design depicts the skyline of a massively crowded city, bulging with structures, against a background of ominous gray clouds in a blue sky. Springing from the pavement is a varicolored rose on a bright green stem that is a symbol of hope for a better urban environment. The design also includes, next to the denomination, the symbol of Habitat, which combines three forms: the circle representing the global nature of the problem, the Greek letter delta representing shelter, and the human figure with arms outstretched in appeal.

Information about mint stamps and first-day covers is available from the Philatelic Service, Canada Post Office, Ottawa, Ontario, KIA OB5, Canada.

Eskimo art has been tapped for a cachet by the World Federation of United Nations Associations, which traditionally accompanies U.N. issues with its own cacheted envelopes.

The cachet is a line drawing, basically in black and white but with color detail, by Jessie Oonark, a Canadian Eskimo, who has been acclaimed for her portrayals of native Eskimo life and customs and her contributions through her art to Eskimo history. Her design, of various peoples of the world with hands joined, symbolizes the multiplicity of global population and the need for international cooperation.

WFUNA has available unstamped cacheted covers, covers with the New York issue and covers with the Geneva issue.

The organization has also arranged for the work, a gift of the artist, to be reproduced in an 8½ by 11 inch print suitable for mounting in a standard album or for framing. The prints will be in a limited edition of 1,000. Each print will be numbered and available without stamps, or with the first-day cancellation of a U.N. stamp in New York or Geneva. The artist has autographed each print in Eskimo syllabics.

Blank covers are 25 cents, five for $1. Covers with the 13-cent stamp are 65 cents, with the 25-cent stamp 80 cents, with the 40-centimes stamp and the 1.50-franc stamps, both with Geneva cancellations, $1.10 and $1.50. Various combinations are available. A print sells for $12.50. There is a postage and handling charge added to mail orders.

Information about the organization's material is available from WFUNA, Room C-104, United Nations, New York, N.Y. 10017.

The material will also be on sale from May 10 through 28 at the special WFUNA sales counter in the Lower Concourse, General Assembly Building, U.N. headquarters. On the first day of issue, May 28, Jessie Oonark, accompanied by her interpreter, will make her first visit to New York and be present to autograph covers.

WFUNA moves about the world for its cachets. For the issue of five days ago marking the U.N. Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), it prevailed on a Japanese artist, Tei Yamamoto, to contribute a cachet design. There are still some of these covers available. Proceeds from the covers are used by WFUNA, an international non-governmental organization, to foster understanding of the U.N.

Pakistan

A panoramic view of Moenjodare, site of a culture that existed 5,000 years ago in Indus Valley and currently being excavated, is depicted on a strip of five se-tenant stamps making a continuous design. Following excavation, the site was endangered as a result of rising underground water levels, salinity and the possibility of inundation by the Indus River. In an echo of the "Save Venice" campaign, experts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization are at the site, and a five-year master plan to save Moenjodaro is under way. More than $7,500,000 will be required, and it is feared the resources of Pakistan alone will not be sufficient.

In line with a U.N. declaration for "Prevention of Blindness" for World Health Day, Pakistan has issued a 20-paisa single showing the human eye through a color screen to draw a contrast between darkness and light. The stamp also bears the World Health Organization symbol.

James Chemi

James M. Chemi, for almost 16 years editor of "The American Philatelist," the monthly organ of the American Philatelic Society and the man who came up with the potent APS "black blot" symbol, died recently at his home in Phoenix, Ariz.

For the past several years he had been serving also as a member of the steering committee of the U.S. Postal Service series of symposia for philatelic groups, and presided over the most recent one, at Tempe, Ariz. early this year, that evoked far-reaching questions about the future of plate blocks and first-day covers.

After a career as a newspaperman on the Philadelphia Inquirer and the Kansas City Star, he succeeded David Lidman in 1960 as editor of the APS publication. In 1965 "The American Philatelist" was put on a full-time basis, and he became its first full-time paid editor. He was editor-in-chief for the APS handbook, "The Yucatan Affair: The Work of Raoul Ch. de Thuin, Philatelic Counterfeiter," which came out in 1974 after nearly seven years of preparation. In 1962 the design he and a friend submitted was adopted for stamp marking the 50th anniversary of Arizonna statehood.

Asphalt Alleys

A commemorative marking the 11th World Championship of Nine Pin Bowling on Asphalt Alleys, showing contestants bowling at nine pins, has been issued by Austria.

Austria has recently issued a 2-schilling commemorative for the Fourth International Congress of Transportation by Rope, which brought together in Vienna experts from 25 countries. It also delves into special issues such as World War II Hawaiian and African overprints and the fascinating postwar Military Payment Certificates. There is a section on error notes, plus information on Government food coupons and souvenir cards.

Any list of good books on America's currency must include the two well-illustrated paperbacks by William P. Donlon, P.O. Box 144, Utica, N.Y. 13503. They are "U.S. Large Size Paper Money," priced at $3.50, and the "Hewitt-Donlon Catalogue of U.S. Small-Size Paper Money," priced at $2.50. Both have been reviewed here in the past, as has the all-time giant standard reference book, "Paper Money of the United States," by Robert and Jack Friedberg, published (at $17.50)) by the Coin and Currency Institute, Inc., 393 Seventh Avenue, New York 10001. Another authoritative, informative "in-depth" book is "The Comprehensive Catalogue of U.S. Paper Money," by Gene Hessler published by Henry Regnery Company, 114 West Illinois Street, Chicago 60610. This 456-page, hardcover book is priced at $20.

Only in illustrated books on paper money will this mind-boggling note be found. The $100,000 gold certificate, with a portrait of Woodrow Wilson, was the highest denomination of U.S. currency ever printed; however, it was currency only in the technical sense: The bills never circulated but were used strictly for inter-bank transactions within the Federal Reserve Bank system.

Judaica Sale

On Wednesday, May 5 (the day before the opening of the annual Greater New York Coin Convention sponsored by the American-Israel Numismatic Association in the New York Sheraton Hotel), the Pine Tree Auction Company, Inc., will conduct an auction of the Raphael Ellenbogen collection of Israel and Judaic coins, pattern coins, paper money, tokens and medals. The auction is not part of the convention; in fact, it will be in a different hotel —the Barbizon Plaza on Central Park South. Highlights of the many rare offerings in the Ellenbogen sale include a large group of kibbutz notes — "necessity" paper money issued by more than 75 different local kibboutzim; a selection of canteen and merchant tokens; a number of Palestine Currency Board notes; many different 19th-century charity tokens and private community and settlers tokens, including those of the German Templars; a nearly complete run of State of Israel banknotes; sets of Agorot coinage and a variety of official Israel medals. Catalogues ($3) can be ordered now. The firm is located at 200 I.U. Willets Road, Albertson, L.I. 11507. Phone: 516-294-0040.

Delivery Delays

A number of readers have written in recent weeks about not receiving the coin sets they ordered from the Mint months ago. The tone of the letters is often bitter. Here's a typical excerpt: "Back in January I mailed in my order along with a check; my cancelled check came back to me from my bank in a few weeks, so I know the Mint had my money all this time but I am still empty-handed. Is the Mint's policy, like that of some private mail order houses, to 'take the money and run'?"

The answer, of course, is that the Mint is not running away with anyone's money.

The Mint's official announcement about deliveries was published in this column last Jan. 4. The gist of it is that all orders for proof sets, uncirculated sets, medals, etc., will be filled on the time-honored "first-come, first served" basis; the Mint will make every effort to fill every order within a specified time, no later than the end of the calendar year in which it was received. If circumstances seem likely to prevent this, then the Mint will send out special forms offering full refunds to all collectors who do not want to wait beyond the originally specified time.

That doesn't sound like a "rip-off" policy at all. So the best advice this department can give is: "Be patient; your sets will arrive in due time. And when they do, we think you'll be glad you waited." Incidentally, your cancelled check is a good sign: it proves that the Mint received and accepted your order.

Mail Only

U.S. and foreign (including ancient and Byzantine) gold, silver and copper coins and medals are among the 970 lots catalogued and offered in a strictly mail-bid sale by Coinhunter, 1616 Walnut Street, Philadelphia 19103. The closing date for receipt of bids is May 13. In addition to featured consignments of papal and Israel coins and medals, the sale offers nearly 100 lots of numismatic literature. The illustrated catalogue is available now. ■

Plan 2: The Intermediate Double. The direct double shows exactly one defensive trick, and partner acts accordingly passing or saving. After a pass, partner will also pass if he has two or more tricks. A double will show that he has less than two tricks, and partner will know what to do.

Plan 3: The Negative Double. The immediate double shows zero tricks, and partner passes with two or more tricks. The immediate pass guarantees at least one trick, and partner knows what to do if he has one trick or more—he passes. With no tricks he also doubles and refers the decision back.

North and South were vulnerable. The bidding:

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♣ | 2 ♡ | 2 ♠ | 4 ♡ |
| 5 ♣ | Pass | 6 ♣ | Dbl. |
| Pass | Pass | Pass | |

West led the heart jack.

These methods are perfect theoretically, but they run into practical difficulties. It is not always possible to judge whether a particular high card is due to take a trick. On the diagramed deal from the Vanderbilt Knockout Teams in Kansas City last month, East and West were using the intermediate double. They judged their potential tricks rather strangely and inadvertently deceived the declarer with decisive results.

The heart bidding by East and West crowded the auction, and they eventually had to decide whether or not they could defeat six clubs. One might think that East would expect to make two tricks and would pass. Rather pessimistically, East doubled—showing one trick. Rather optimistically, West passed, presumably thinking that his club queen would score.

South was Gerry Charney of Toronto, substituting for Eric Murray on the Aces team. He received a heart lead, and unfortunately for him inquired carefully about the opponents' doubling methods. On learning that East's double showed one trick and that West needed a trick to pass he played on that basis. He judged that his best chance was to find West with a doubleton diamond ace, so after drawing trumps he led a diamond toward the king in dummy. When East produced the ace the slam was doomed.

If South had known that East held two potential tricks, the diamond ace and the spade king, he would surely have made the contract. He would have thrown a diamond on the heart ace and led a low diamond. East would have to duck and seven rounds of trumps would be led to reach this position:

|---|---|---|
| | NORTH♠ Q6♡ —◊ K7♣ — | |
| WEST♠ J9♡ K◊ 10♣ — | | EAST♠ K10♡ —◊ AJ♣ — |
| | SOUTH♠ A7♡ —◊ 8♣ J | |

On the last trump the declarer would throw a diamond from dummy. Then East would be helpless. If he threw a diamond to preserve his spade protection, a diamond lead would endplay him, forcing a lead from the spade king at the 12th trick. East-West received a dividend from their strange bidding judgment—they won a match that the Aces would have won if the slam had succeeded. ■

The Official Medal Commemorating the Bicentennial Visit of The King of Sweden

Proofs in solid sterling silver available only until April 30, 1976.

HIS MAJESTY CARL XVI GUSTAF, KING OF SWEDEN, arrived earlier this month for an official Bicentennial Visit to the United States in tribute to our nation's birthday. The King's plans include a meeting with President Ford and an extensive tour during which he will personally greet Americans of Swedish descent in many American cities.
While in Philadelphia, King Carl Gustaf was presented with a solid 24kt gold medal honoring his Bicentennial Visit. The medal was struck by The Franklin Mint, America's largest private mint.
To enable American families to own a lasting commemorative of this great occasion, The Franklin Mint has also been authorized to strike a limited edition of this official medal in solid sterling silver. Each sterling silver Proof will be exceptionally large—two full inches in diameter—and each will contain 750 grains of sterling silver.
A STRICTLY LIMITED EDITION
Orders for this official medal will be accepted only until April 30, 1976, and the total edition will be limited to the exact number of orders postmarked by that date. The issue price for each sterling silver Proof medal is $29. To acquire this historic commemorative, mail the order form below no later than April 30.
Philadelphia '76, Inc., the official Bicentennial agency of the City of Philadelphia, has authorized The Franklin Mint to strike one 24kt gold Proof of this medal for presentation to the King of Sweden and sterling silver Proofs for individual collectors.

Rust Removers: Some Dissolve It, Others Convert It to a New Coati

By BERNARD GLADSTONE

Whenever ferrous metals (those containing iron and most steels) are exposed to air and moisture, rust is a constant threat and often a recurring problem. For years the classic way to remove rust was to mechanically polish or scrape it off, using wire brushes, steel wool, abrasive papers, or anything else that would do the job.

However, these days there is a much simpler method to remove rust. Practically all hardware, department and auto supply stores sell prepared liquid or semi-paste compounds that will do the job chemically with a minimum of effort on the part of the user. Some are designed to dissolve the rust so that it can be flushed away with water to expose the bare metal, while others chemically transform the rust into a solid substance that forms a protective coating and provides a sound, solid base for painting over.

The original and still the most widely sold type of chemical rust remover is the kind that dissolves rust and leaves a residue that can be flushed away with water. Usually consisting of a phosphoric acid compound of some type, some brands have a heavier consistency than others so they will stay in place and not run when applied to vertical surfaces.

All of these removers should be applied with a brush in as thick a layer as possible. Small objects (such as tools or pieces of hardware) are easiest to clean if they are placed in a pan or dish, then coated with the rust remover and allowed to lie in a shallow pool of the liquid. The remover is then sloshed back over the rust to help it penetrate, continuing for the length of time specified on the label (usually from 5 to 15 minutes, depending on how badly rusted the object is.) The residue is then flushed away with water—supposedly taking the rust with it.

Although instructions on some brands claim that this is all the effort required, as a practical matter users find that a bit more work and care is required. First of all, heavy layers of loose or flaking rust should be wire-brushed or scraped off before starting since these will greatly slow up penetration. Second, rusted surfaces are often also dirty or greasy surfaces, and grease or dirt will also interfere with complete penetration. Therefore it is usually a good idea to clean the surface first by wiping down with paint thinner or similar solvent.

In addition, it is seldom adequate to merely allow the remover to soak on the surface before flushing it away with water. With heavy coats two or even three applications will be required. Even with moderate rust it is usually best to agitate the film intermittently by rubbing with a fairly stiff brush while the chemical is soaking into the rust, and to apply repeated layers by simply brushing the liquid over the surface time and again.

When it comes time to flush the residue away with water, the most effective results will usually be obtained if it is physically scrubbed off with a coarse cloth or brush, rather than merely flushing away with a hose or under a faucet. To get the metal really bright (it usually comes out dull and grayish looking) it may be necessary to then polish with a soft, wire brush or medium grade steel wool.

Some removers have instructions that advise the user not to wash all the residue off with water. Instead, they recommend merely wiping off with a damp cloth or sponge so as to leave a slight film on the surface, claiming that this film is a form of protection that will help prevent future rusting.

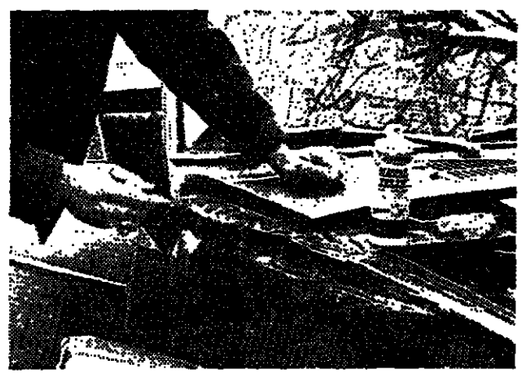
Practically all of these rust removers advise caution when used on or near chrome plated surfaces (wash off promptly or it may discolor the chrome), and most advise also keeping it away from painted surfaces (rinse it off painted areas as soon as possible).

The newest type of rust remover is not really a remover at all. As mentioned previously, it works on an entirely different principle. Instead of removing the rust it reacts chemically with it to form a new metal-like coating that bonds firmly to the original metal and serves as a solid base over which paint can be applied. This brand (called Trustan 7) reacts with the oxides (rust) to form a rust-inhibitive insoluble film that is a blue-black in color.

To use this type of rust-convertor the liquid is brushed vigorously into the surface with a stiff brush, then allowed to stand for about 24 hours to allow the reaction to take place. When reaction is complete, all the rust will be a metallic blue-black in color, and it will be solidified. After the 24-hour period, the surface is rinsed with water to remove any active chemicals that are left (the surplus that did not react with the rust), after which the surface is allowed to dry before paint is applied. Needless to say, this type of remover is most suitable for objects that will be painted since it does not restore the bright metal look to surfaces that are to be left unpainted.

One thing that should be kept in mind to avoid disappointment when using any rust remover (or rust convertor) is that all of these products cannot do anything about removing pit marks where rust has actually eaten the metal away by working its way in beneath the surface. In other words, they cannot replace metal that is gone, so will not restore the original smooth surface if it is pitted or partially eaten away.

That is why it is still better to protect against corrosion, instead of waiting till an object is rusty and then trying to clean it off. The best way to protect metal is to keep it coated with a moisture-repellent film of some kind—paint, oil, grease, wax—anything that will keep air and water away from surface. And remembe coating is needed on faces and sides, not the front which may b visible.



Woodhill Chemical Co.

Rust remover should be brushed on as thick as possible, then allowed to soak in.

Home Clinic

Q: In order to refinish the top of an antique cherrywood table I used varnish remover to strip off all of the old finish. I found that many stains and discolorations still remained in the wood, so I used a bleaching agent (sodium hydroxide and hydrogen peroxide). These worked well on the clean areas, but not on all of the discolored areas, so I then used oxalic acid solution. This still left some darkened areas that mar the appearance. Apparently some sealer was used that keeps the bleach from penetrating. Do you know what else I can do? —P.S.M., Moorestown, N. J.

A: In the first place, for bleaching bad stains out of wood you need a prepared two-solution bleach of the kind sold in well-stocked paint stores for just this purpose. Oxalic acid is not as strong, and the household bleaches you used are not easily controlled—or strong enough in most cases. Next, you have to do a very thorough job with the remover if bleach is to be used. As you've discovered, spots that are not stripped clean will not absorb the bleach at all. I'd suggest going over the dark area with more remover, then sanding with medium grit paper after it dries. Then try the two-solution wood bleach.

Q: The way my house was built the insulation butts up against the back of the sheathing under the shingles, and this has created a moisture problem which is causing paint to peel on the outside. If I install midget louvers in the outside siding, air will circulate behind the insulation, resulting in a great heat loss. Is there a special primer I can use that will act as a vapor barrier? —J.W.S., Norwalk, Conn.

A: You are apparently confused on several points: First, midget louvers in the exterior siding or shingles will not cause any appreciable heat loss since they do not penetrate the insulation—only the siding. Second, if a vapor barrier is needed, it is only useful if applied on the warm side of the insulation (on the inside), not on the cold side or outside. You don't want a vapor barrier on the outside of your siding since this would make matters much worse by trapping moisture inside the wood. The idea of louvers on the outside (if needed) is to allow moisture to escape harmlessly without pushing the paint off.

Q: Can you tell me what to use to re-polish my marble fireplace? I used a spray cleaner on some areas and this dulled the finish. Washing with soap and water didn't help. —V.D.C., New York City.

A: Any good quality white paste wax will restore the polish. The marble probably had a wax on it in the first place, and the spray cleaner removed this, leaving the surface dull. Clean the marble with a mild, neutral detergent, allow it to dry thoroughly, then apply the wax and polish it. After this use only a mild detergent to clean the surface.

Q: We started to reset our wobbly fence posts in cement but find after trying one or two that we have a problem with keeping the posts plumb while we are pouring the cement, and while it stiffens. We use a level to plumb them, but after we start pouring the cement and then poking it into the hole to get rid of air po the posts shift. Do you know of any "trick" that can prevent this?—K.H.L., Hartford, Conn.

A: After you dug the hole to proper depth, plac or gravel in the bottom so the p rests on this, not soil. Then set a post in place, but it in the proper (so it is plumb) by nailing up tempor braces. As the dra shows, you will ne braces at right to each other, w each one sloping downward to the ground. A pointed peg is then d into the ground and the bottom end of each brace ne this peg to keep it from slipping. The usual sequence is to first nail the brace to the post, then drive it pegs, plumb the post, and nail the other end of the brace to the peg.

Q: My English Tudor home has casement type windows that open out and have a leaded glass lo that I hate to lose by installing storm sash. Howev in the winter we freeze and our oil bills are astron I have considered weather-stripping but the only ki I have seen that can be used is the sticky foam strip which seems too flimsy to be worthwhile. Do you thi I should install this, or is it necessary to put on storm windows? If so, is there any way I can keep the look leaded casement windows?—A.H., Yonkers, N.Y.

A: I think you need both—the weatherstripping the storm sash—if you really want to cut down on your fuel bills. The foam stripping will definitely he you use the heavy duty, closed-cell type. Apply it to the inside face of the movable sash along the edges press against the frame when the window is closed. I storm sash you can get special "piggy back" types which mount on the inside (or outside) of each sash, so they will not hide the look from the outside. T not as effective as full outside storm windows that also enclose the metal frame of each window, but will be a big help.

Is Meyer Zoysia really a Miracle Lawn Grass?
NO. IT'S JUST THE BEST ALL-AROUND TURF GRASS YET DEVELOPED FOR THE MAJORITY OF AMERICA'S LAWNS!

ABOUT MEYER Z-52 ZOYSIA
Meyer Zoysia created a small sensation when it was first introduced in the early 1950's by Summit Hall Turf Farm. Its qualities of heat & drought resistance, beautiful appearance, its ability to crowd out crabgrass & summer weeds permanently, its capacity to thrive without fertilizers, its need for very little water, and its requirements for two-thirds less mowing make it an ideal lawn.

ABOUT SUMMIT HALL TURF FARM
Summit Hall Turf Farm is the first & foremost grower of Meyer Z-52 Zoysia. Summit Hall sold Zoysia Farms Amazoy and most other mail order nurseries their starter Zoysia material from the first commercial foundation stock. This is Summit Hall's 28th year in the turf grass business and we have sent many millions of Zoysia plugs to home owners in all parts of the U.S., and 28 foreign countries, to establish their beautiful lawns.

VEGETABLES and FRUITS
...expert, how-to-do-it help with over 100 charts and full-color illustrations

Book size 8½" x 11"; each volume 160-176 pages, 40,000 words; over 100 full-color photographs and paintings, plus dozens of fine drawings, charts, diagrams.

The TIME-LIFE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF GARDENING is possibly the most useful, valuable gardening aid ever published. It will help you save time, and increase the yield from your garden.

The author of the series, James Underwood Crockett, is one of America's best-known horticulturists. Now, with the editors of TIME-LIFE BOOKS, he passes on to you all of his practical know-how . . . all of his trade secrets, tips, shortcuts and solutions to gardening problems.

Nothing is left to guesswork. Every volume tells you exactly what you need to know . . . and shows you how — with step-by-step illustrations and glorious full-color pictures.

Each volume in the series contains a large, beautifully illustrated "A to Z" encyclopedia section, describing the botanical varieties covered in the volume. In Vegetables and Fruits, for example, you actually get four encyclopedia sections: You'll see what to expect and how to best grow Vegetables . . . Fruits . . . Nuts . . . Herbs. In addition, you get charts on when to plant in various areas . . . pest controls for fruits, fruit trees, nuts, vegetables . . . illustrations of most common pests . . . a cook's guide to 23 basic herbs . . . practical garden layouts.

You really have to see for yourself how informative and valuable these volumes are. So examine — and enjoy — Vegetables and Fruits for 10 days free. If it doesn't live up to your expectations, return it without cost or obligation. Full details are in the order form below.

TIME LIFE BOOKS

In this volume you'll see HOW TO • grow more plants in a given area • keep down weeds • make a plastic root cellar • preserve herbs • identify tomato diseases • get more tomato blossoms to form fruit • reduce cutworm damage

PRAISE FROM A PROFESSIONAL
"My husband and I manage a wholesale tree nursery. This set is by far the best one I have used. . . . Not only is it enthusiastically written and easy to read but the alphabetical listing is so logically arranged that I have yet to look up a question that I cannot find the answer to quickly and easily." Dutchman's breeches have one bad habit—or perhaps it is what makes them seem so special—they disappear after blooming. It's a good idea to mark where the tubers are so the delicate white tubers aren't dug up for some new project. Ferns can be planted among them.

Dutchman's breeches are one of several dicentras suitable for the woods garden, rock garden, perennial border, or groundcover.

Another favorite is D. eximia, the fringed or wild bleeding-heart. Far from disappearing, fringed bleeding-heart is around from early spring until frost. It is nearly ever-blooming, covered in spring with a wealth of pink flowers which remain, somewhat less abundantly, until fall.

Thickly planted, fringed bleeding-heart makes a fine groundcover, particularly in shade. Its lush, ferny, blue-green foliage and abundant little heart-shaped blossoms are a joy. It makes sizable clumps which can easily be divided; it also self-sows. A white form is available, as are hybrids with redder blossoms.

The biggest, boldest and most popular of the dicentra clan is old-fashioned bleeding-heart, D. spectabilis, found in nearly every perennial border. While its showy bright pink flowers, size and stature contrast markedly with Dutchman's breeches, it is equally adept at the disappearing act and vanishes by the end of summer.

Roadside stands usually offer both fringed bleeding-heart and old-fashioned bleeding-heart in early spring—a good time to plant them. The other dicentras must generally be ordered from wild flower nurseries or growers specializing in rock plants. ■

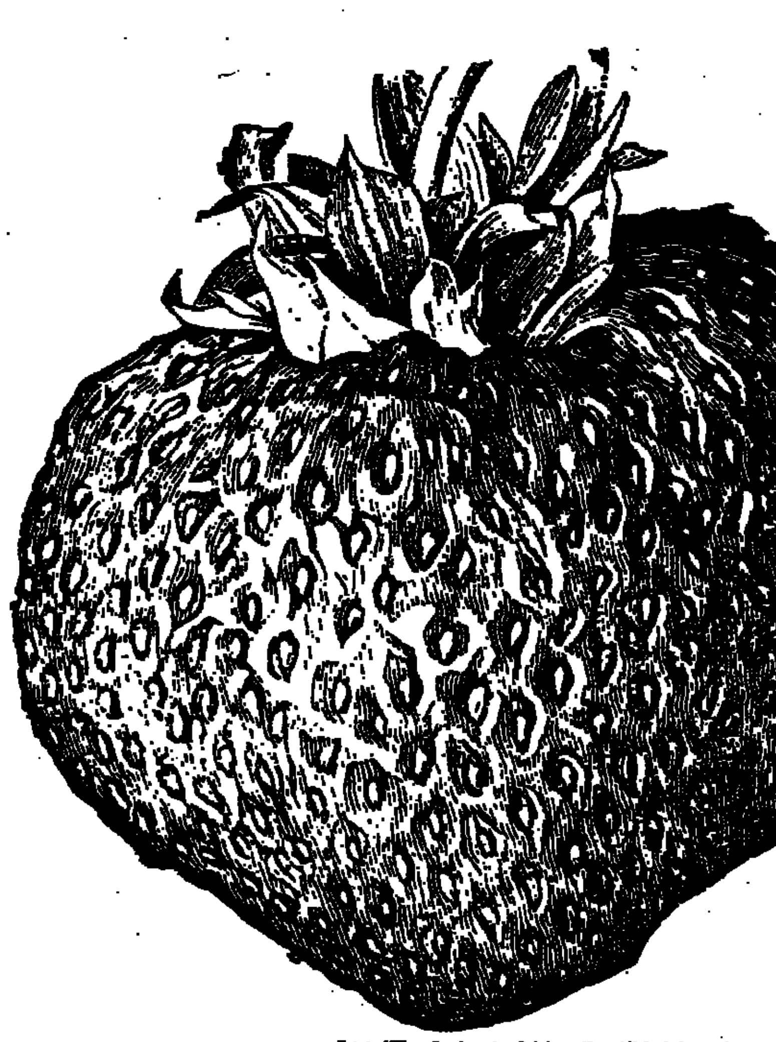
It's Time to Consider A Strawberry Patch

By JOHN P. TOMKINS



From "The Gardener's Catalogue" published by William Morrow and Co.

Strawberries are easy to grow and a practical fruit crop for home gardens in all areas of the Northeast. The fruit is very delicious in addition to being a good source of vitamin C. A row 50 feet in length will produce enough fruit to supply the needs of a family of four.

A strawberry plant is a victim of its environment. It cannot reach far for water, sunlight or soil nutrients as the bulk of its roots and leaves are within ten inches of the plant crown.

For a strawberry planting to be successful, one must do the following things:

1] Grow the plants in a sunny location and keep them free of large weeds.

2] Water during periods of drought.

3] Protect the developing flowers, open flowers or developing berries from damage by late frosts.

4] Protect plants from heaving and low temperature injury to the crowns by mulching in late fall.

5] Supply the nutrients essential for growth by growing the plants in a soil well supplied with organic residues or use commercial fertilizers.

The three best strawberry varieties for gardens are Fletcher, Sparkle and Catskill. Fletcher and Catskill were developed by the Geneva Agricultural Experiment Station. Fletcher is excellent for fresh fruit and when frozen, better than Sparkle.

Catskill is the most widely grown variety in the Northeast. It does well in home gardens because it has a fair amount of resistance to verticillium wilt disease likely to be present in soils where tomatoes or potatoes were grown previously. Ozark Beauty is a good everbearing variety with a June crop and another crop in late summer and continuing to early fall.

Strawberries grow best and are more easily managed on a sandy loam soil but they grow well on clay loams to coarse sands. If the soil is wet or poorly drained, grow strawberries on an elevated bed by making a ridge five to eight inches high and 16 to 24 inches wide.

The plants respond to soils high in organic residues. Work into the soil, two to three inches of waste hay, straw, lawn clippings, leaves or manure. Plow, spade, or rototill the soil in early spring to a depth of five to six inches.

Apply five to ten pounds of 10-10-10 fertilizer or equivalent per 100 linear feet of row and cultivate the fertilizer into top three to four inches of soil.

Plants are transplanted in early spring preferably before the hot and dry weather of June. They are set 18 to 24 inches apart in the row and four to five feet between rows. Place the roots vertically into the soil so that all roots at the top of the plant crown are covered by a quarter inch of firm soil. After planting, step on both sides of the plant to firm the soil around the roots and then level the soil to cover the footprints.

The best time to transplant is during the cool evening. Each plant should have one cup of water or liberal soaking with a garden sprinkler. Set only good nursery stock with white roots and one or two green leaves. Do not buy or set plants with black or moldy roots.

Cultivate, hoe and if necessary hand weed at intervals of ten to fourteen days from early spring until late September. Do not cultivate more than two inches deep or hoe more than one-half inch deep.

When flower buds appear in the new planting, remove all flowers on June bearing varieties the first year and remove flowers on everbearing varieties until July 1. This stimulates the vegetative growth of the plants to produce many leaves and early runners.

Keep the runners in a row about 18 inches wide by either cultivation or hand spacing. Space runners by hand at intervals of eight to ten inches between plants within the 18-inch row. The runners are spaced by pushing the young runner plant into the moist soil or by placing a small stone or handful of soil on the runner stem to hold it in place.

The planting may need to be watered during dry periods. A strawberry plant needs approximately one inch of water per week.

The flower buds for the 1976 crop were formed in the terminal part of the crowns in September of 1975. A large green leaf area per plant in 1975 indicates a potential for a large crop in 1976.

The need for fertilizer will vary greatly with the location. If the soil is high in organic matter and received 10-10-10 in early spring, it is quite possible the planting will not need any additional fertilizer until harvest the following year.

Judgment is required here because if much organic material high in carbon was used, some additional nitrogen may be needed in late June and again in late August. Most strawberry growers tend to over-emphasize the importance of fertilizer and under emphasize the essential need for water.

During late November, or early December when the temperatures fall to 20 degrees, mulch the planting to prevent low temperature damage to the plants and to keep the fruit clean the following spring. The ideal mulch materials are marsh grass, wheat straw, pine needles, sawdust, shavings or wood chips if applied to a depth of 1½ to two inches.

A bale of straw will mulch approximately 50 linear feet of row. The mulch should remain on the planting until the new strawberry leaves have made two to three inches of growth the following spring. At this time remove half of the marsh grass or straw and place it in the alley between the rows. If sawdust or woodchips were used at a depth of one to two inches, it is not essential to remove this mulch as the plants will grow through this layer.

After harvest, the planting may be renovated for an additional year if it is relatively free of weeds and rather vigorous and productive. Renovate a planting by mowing the strawberry leaves at a height of two to three inches. A rotary lawn mower does a nice job of cutting the leaves immediately after harvest.

Either rototill the mulch in the alleys between the rows into the soil or remove it to the compost pile. Cultivate the planting; fertilize with five pounds of 10-10-10 per 100 linear feet of row; irrigate as needed; and weed as necessary.

The biggest problem of fruiting a strawberry bed for two or more years is an excessive number of plants. Keep at least six inches, preferably eight inches between plants. Some growers have fruited the same planting for eight consecutive years. Some people have used a two to three inch layer of wood chips for a mulch and not cultivated a planting for four to five years. Others use plastic mulch and set the plants after mulch is in place. ■ leaves—like miniature boxwood—is often used as edging in a herb garden. Because its taste is sweeter and less strong, the annual summer savory is often preferred to the sharper perennial. But summer savory must be sown each year. The annual is usually listed among the herbs in a general seed catalog; winter savory is not.

Basic Herbs

Lemon balm and apple mint are symbols of summer days to me. Their perennial roots are quite hardy but their tops die down in winter. Tea brewed of the dried leaves is a hot tonic on a cold day, but I make far more lavish use of the fresh foliage on almost every summer day.

Apple mint, my favorite of the many mints, has a strong fruity flavor, though not especially like apple, just fruity. Lemon balm, too, is fruity, as if meant for fruits (whereas lemon thyme is fitting for fish or meat). A few leaves of balm and/or mint can flavor a dish of fresh strawberries or apple sauce, fruit salads or cold fruit soups, sherberts or jellies.

For the "lemonade" of old New England, pour boiling water on balm leaves, let stand for 15 minutes, strain and cool. My great-aunts, who lived long lives on a Rhode Island farm, used to make a special sweet-sour drink for the men at haying time. They steeped both balm and mint (probably spearmint), then added raspberry juice, sugar and a little vinegar to the strained liquid. They cooled the drink in the cellar and took it out to the fields in big pitchers (washbowl pitchers from the bedrooms).

To start lemon balm, sow seed or set out young plants. Plant root stock of apple mint. Both herbs do best in good—not especially rich—garden soil, moist but well-drained. I have plants of each in both sun and shade. If possible, locate mint in an out-of-the-way place. Its drawback is rampant growth by means of creeping roots. In fall, I pull up all invasive woody stalks, dry in the sun, break them up and use as fragrant kindling for winter fires. Lemon balm spreads, too, but not as a real nuisance. Pull up overgrown sprawling plants; reset young growth or use self-sown seedlings.

Lemon balm or balm (Melissa officinalis) is a pretty plant with light-green leaves pinked at the edges and small white flowers. (Note: Do not confuse lemon balm with beebalm. Monarda didyma, a wild plant and herb, also used for a refreshing tea.)

Apple mint has strong, tall stalks; mine stand erect. The woolly gray-green leaves are somewhat round in shape. Mentha rotundifolia is the Latin name; flowers are pink-lavender.

Dill? It's a valued condiment same as salt but far more healthful and often makes salt unnecessary. Dill points up a food's flavor and adds its own. It doesn't go with everything but the list of fitting foods is long: cucumber, cabbage, cauliflower, potato, spaghetti, fish and some meats, cottage cheese, vinegar, pickled beets etc. I use the seed in bread and cakes instead of caraway.

Dill is easy to grow. It does best in full sun, in loose, fertile soil. Broadcast seed in a 4 by 4 foot site, or sow in clumps so that the slender plants can lean on each other for support. The variety Bouquet is recommended for its erect growth and stiff stems.

A hardy annual, dill self-sows readily. I have planted dill only once. After many years, my dill still comes up every year, mostly in the original site, but here and there, too. On any summer day, there are dill plants in various stages of growth. Mulch the site lightly over winter; seeds in bare exposed ground are not likely to survive.

Dill's ferny foliage and flower clusters are chartreuse-colored. All parts of the plant are edible: the stalk and stems when young and tender; the flower buds; the foliage called dill "weed," which tastes far better fresh but is sometimes dried; and the seeds, green or dried. When the seeds are light brown, break off the umbels, dry in the sun a few days, strip off the seeds and store in glass jars for winter use. Be sure to leave a few mature plants to shatter their seed and self-sow.

Basil is the de-luxe herb. In India, its native land, it is venerated. In France, basil once flavored the food of kings; it is still Herbe Royale. No herb, to my mind, has such marvelous effect on plain or bland food. Used in small quantities, that is, and where appropriate. Basil goes with eggs, cottage cheese, squash, potatoes, spaghetti. My favorite summer sandwich is bread and basil-flavored butter.

Basil and tomato have special affinity. They go together in the garden, too. Both need warm rich soil and a sunny site. Besides, basil's mere presence seems to promote the well-being of tomato.

Since basil grows faster, seed can be sown at the same time (mid or late May) that young tomato plants are being set outside. Or for a head start, sow basil seed inside in a flat. As a houseplant, basil can furnish year-round fresh leaves, which do taste better than the dried. Potted basil on a terrace repels flies and mosquitoes, but not us. ■

Can you bury your plants alive?

Looking for reasons why some plants don't thrive? Look at your potting soil.

If it's too compacted, it can actually inhibit root growth and development.

If it drains poorly, it can reduce the amount of life-giving air or water and nutrients available to roots.

If it lacks fertility, it's lacking the elements to good growth.

And it probably shows.

Based on independent laboratory testing, Swiss Farms All-Purpose Potting Soil was proven superior to seven major competitors in one of the most significant criteria: fertility.

The key is just the right blend of Hudson Valley humus. It also contains the right amount of Sphagnum peat moss to resist compaction, and horticultural sand to foster proper drainage.

Swiss Farms Potting Soil. Just one part of the complete Swisstem™ of plant care products your plants deserve. From pots to potting soil, plant food to insect spray, we're convinced you'll find Swiss Farms products are the best you can buy.

Daylilies Are Dandy For Summer

Molly Price

Daylilies thrive in shade.

By MOLLY PRICE

The popularity of daylilies has increased rapidly in the last few years. Breeding efforts have been so successful that the average life-span of daylily flowers has jumped from about 12 hours to 16 or 18 hours.

A number of recent varieties have flowers that open one evening and remain crisp and beautiful until late the next night. These new types are a far cry from the Day Lilie described in Gerard's Herbal ". . . in the morning his bud. . . . at noon in full blowen. in the evening it is rotten. . ."

For years daylilies have bloomed in my southeastern New York garden from May to frost and sometimes until November, because I plant early, mid-season, mid-late and late-blooming varieties.

More recently, the tendency for repeat bloom has been increased by breeders. Some new varieties flower longer than the period of three to five weeks. Nowadays there actually are daylilies that will bloom continuously from the beginning of July to the end of September. They will, that is, if they are fed a low-nitrogen fertilizer about mid-August, and watered in dry periods.

Molly Price is author of "The Iris Book."

Daylily plant size now varies from ten-inch bloomstalks on midget plants with grass-like leaves, to impressive fountains of arching leaves with bloomstalks 40 inches high.

Gardeners can have their pick of flower sizes, from flamboyant blooms seven or eight inches across to those only an inch and a half wide. Many of the most charming new varieties have exquisitely detailed flowers with ruffled, crimped or pleated edges. Many bear five or four inch blooms on two to three foot stems.

Although it's a long way to a blue daylily, breeders have gotten as far as lavender and purple. One variety, Prairie Blue Eyes, has a hint of blue in the wide halo surrounding a green throat. Two recently introduced purples are Summer Wine, a strong purple red; and Purple Magic, light purple with lemon color at the heart.

Other new color shades are incredibly dark but glowing red tones as in American Revolution, a velvety dark red-wine and "near white"—actually very pale yellow as in Prairie Moonlight, which bears eight-inch flowers.

My favorite is pale cream and chartreuse-toned Silver King. Waxy ruffled flowers of White Formal are very near to white, too.

One type of daylily flower, called spider, has long narrow segments, recurved and often twisted. Red Thrill is a cherry-red spider with a large green throat. It often reblooms. Lily Dache is a dashing gold-colored spider, with twisted segments brushed with cinnamon.

The biggest thing in daylily breeding is the emergence of tetraploid daylilies, with four sets of chromosomes instead of two. Though they have been in existence for nearly 40 years (Robert Schreiner, the famous iris hybridizer, produced the first ones when he was in college), intensive breeding work began in the 1950s. Until very recently, plants have been prohibitively expensive.

As supplies increased, prices on the older varieties began to drop and I acquired a few. They do make extremely desirable garden plants. Flower segments are thicker; colors are richer and more luminous. Flower scapes are particularly strong, and firmly upright. It would take a severe storm, I think, to blow them down. In addition, the plants are unsually vigorous. Golden Sunrey produced four well-branched bloomstalks its first year in my garden. The bowl-shaped clear yellow flowers with serrated edges were enormous.

The earliest tetraploid daylily introductions, such as the Crestwood series, were colchicine-induced. (Now, they are grown from seed.) The pale melon Crestwood Ann, which has fertile pollen, was one of my first choices. Then I acquired pongee-pink Gertrude Smith, which will set seed. Of course I had to try them out as parents—just for fun.

Two pods formed, each with a few seeds. (The tendency of tetraploid daylilies to be stingy seed-setters handicaps breeders, but is a boon to the average daylily enthusiast who is almost certain to be short on garden space). Anyway, two years later, three beautiful rose-colored seedlings bloomed. I call them Woodrose.

This year, for the first time, mixed seeds of tetraploid daylilies are listed in the catalogue of Park Seed Co. Plants of recent tetraploid introductions are now listed in at least one big commercial catalogue at prices ranging from $10 to $50. Older, garden-worthy tetraploids are available at modest prices. My favorites include Tamlin, almost tangerine; dark red Arriba, with a green throat; shell-pink Queen Eleanor; and Mary Todd, a light yellow with very wide petals.

Daylilies, whether tetraploid or diploid are among the easiest perennials to grow. They adapt to almost any kind of soil, to sun or part shade, and can be planted at any time the soil is free of frost and workable. I plant late bloomers in the spring. All other sorts go in the ground in late summer or early fall.

They benefit, I think, from a green background of shrubs or small trees, but it is very pleasant to have clumps of pastel or nearest-to-white varieties that remain open until midnight or later, planted around a terrace where one can enjoy the glimmer of shapely flowers in the dusk of a summer evening.

Prepare soil for planting by mixing in compost or peat moss to the depth of one foot. Then open a hole for each plant about ten inches deep and ten inches across. Build a cone in the center and set the plant firmly on top with the roots hanging down around the cone. The crown (where roots and leaves meet) should be about an inch below soil level. ■

Blossoms Month By Month

By WINIFRED LUTEN

From late February into November there is bloom in my New Jersey garden. It starts with the first snowdrops and crocus in winter's snows, and ends with a few rosebuds, 'mums and annuals that have survived light frosts.

I didn't start with a plan for continuous bloom, but, like most tyros, with seeds and bedding plants from the corner store, I expected a riot of color from spring to fall. I soon learned that to see flowers all season one needs many kinds of plants, a few from each basic category.

Spring bulbs, for earliest bloom; shrubs, for early bloom and large areas of background color (includes roses); herbaceous perennials, for early flower borders, variety and permanence; annuals, for continuous hot weather bloom till frost. Most bulbs, shrubs and perennials bloom a few weeks, some longer; roses are remontant; annuals bloom longest, but must be replaced each year.

Every garden grows from experimentation, and must be adapted to ones own environment and space. But some plan is essential to show flowers to best advantage. I kept to basic design of background shrubs, fronted by lower perennials and annuals around open lawn space. Like a big green-carpeted room, with color-splashed, curving green walls, the garden can be seen at a glance from house and patio, a changing picture through the seasons.

A backdrop of broadleaved evergreens, azaleas, andromeda, mountain laurel and rhododendron gives permanent dark green, while deciduous shrubs fill in around corners and sides. Spring bulbs are planted before evergreens, facing south, where winter sun forces early bloom, but later flickering oak shade is ideal for evergreens. Most of garden gets five or six hours of sun, but back and left rear borders about two.

February and March

The season starts slowly. There is no experience quite like those first winter flowers. So tiny they are easy to miss. Snowdrops (Galanthus), like clumps of snow on pale green stems, often camouflaged by real snow, are soon joined by purple and yellow crocus. Both bloom through March followed by Scilla sibirica, little racemes of deep blue bells, into April.

Winifred Luten is a writer who gardens in New Jersey.

April

One of best spring shows is Red Emperor tulips in a semi-circle before evergreens. Long, brilliant scarlet petals open like black-and-yellow-centered poppies to close with dusk or clouds and reopen next day.

Shrubs join the bulbs. Forsythia makes a golden splash in a side border. Andromeda is covered with drooping white clusters among new, bronze-edged, chartreuse leaves.

The first little woodsy, shade-loving perennials appear in back corners; purple violets, pink bleeding heart and red and yellow primroses near bright patches of blue phlox.

May and June

These months the garden reaches a crescendo of color, with most flowering shrubs in full glory, soon joined by roses and perennials. One of most brilliant displays is azaleas hinodegiri, a blanket of rosy-crimson, with dainty pink flowering almond nearby.

Other shrubs slowly fill in. Japanese kerria is a mass of pure gold beside blue phlox. As azaleas fade, a pink weigela, then a red one and a tall white mock orange carry May into June with massed pink and white of laurels and huge crimson-orchid clusters of rhododendron.

Bearded iris, one of best tall perennials, joins the chorus in May, bringing color to sunny front side borders. Purple, yellow, red and lavender, iris flower beside yellow day lilies and red and white peonies.

June is for roses. Across a high back arbor Blaze and New Dawn throw a splash of red and pale pink all month. A pink hedge of floribunda Betty Prior fills in behind slowly disappearing iris. Reds, salmons, pinks and yellows of floribundas and hybrid teas are clustered near the center borders.

Amidst the panoply of roses, the side perennial border adds new contrasting colors and shapes. Blue spires of veronica, feathery plumes of red, white, and pink astilbe, deep pink umbels of Achillea, purple bells of Platycodon and massed golden buttercups of Oenothera.

July

Roses and perennials slowly fade. Massed shrubs are lush green now, with two hydrangeas (macrophylla) covered with huge sky-blue balls, making a lovely, cool contrasting background for red and orange daylilies.

Annuals set out in May have reached full size and carry most of the color now. Red, pink and white impatiens and wax begonias are spotted in front of shady borders with low masses of blue ageratum, contrasting fiery reds of geraniums and scarlet sage in sunny spots. Two side borders are large masses of crimson, pink, white and salmon impatiens, variegated coleus, blue Ageratum and red salvia in front of taller perennials: rudbeckia Monarda and tall garden phlox.

August and September

Though not many new things appear, late summer and early fall is another peak of color. Annuals have reached bush-size and fill the garden with lush tropical splendor.

A few new perennials bloom: lycoris and fragrant white hostas. Spotted here and there is sedum, an attractive succulent covered with flat rosy umbels. From early September to frost one large mass of lavender-blue eupatorium fills a back corner, with pink and red impatiens on one side and flaming salvia on other.

October and November

As September blends into October, the garden has not lost its brilliance. Blues, reds, pinks and whites of annuals still contrast with yellow rudbeckia and blue eupatorium, and that sturdy late perennial, Chrysanthemum, makes spots of purple here and there, with roses still bright and full.

But soon subtle changes occur, as colder nights and shorter days take their toll. Though most annuals survive light frosts late in October, they make no new growth, and are struck off a few at a time. Last to survive, usually into November, is the tough scarlet sage, with spots of flame here and there. Lush greens of foliage begin to fade, and roses scatter their color.

Some time in November a heavy frost will blacken flowers and foliage. Lawn and evergreens make the last green. But always a few Crimson Glory rosebuds and violet mums can be gathered for bouquets.

And when the first snows of December come, only the annuals are dead. The rest of the garden is only sleeping till spring. ■

The Costly Joys Of Horsemanship

the stable manager to act as go-between. (The borrower may not even have to pick up the tab on the stable bill; in some cases having someone exercise the horse is the owner's only concern.)

The rider who has caught the fever and simply must own, his own horse is advised to shop with a great deal of caution; a hasty decision can prove financially disastrous and possibly dangerous. It is amazing how many people will buy a horse or pony simply because he is flashy, or cute, or has four white-stocking feet. Even if the horse is being bought for a child, the child should never be permitted to make the final decision.

Most people will need some help in selecting the right horse, and the best place to turn for that help is to a professional horse dealer. Not a "horse trader" who keeps his auction-bought animals jammed in a ramshackle barn in some backyard, but a manager or a head riding instructor at a well-kept stable, or one of the directors of a branch of the U.S. Pony Club. (George L. Helwig, 303 South High Street, West Chester, Pa. 19380 can furnish the address of the director nearest you.) These professionals have reputations far different from that of the used-car salesmen with whom some horse dealers are often justly compared. As Philip Ake, former Director of the Ox Ridge Hunt Club in Darien, Conn., says, "We try to put the right combinations of horse and rider together. Our reputations in the community depend on making a good match."

For the 10 to 15 percent commission these professionals charge, they will test and evaluate your riding ability and then locate a horse that is within your capabilities as a rider. No reputable horse dealer will try to sell you or your child an animal that is too much to handle. Few riders "grow into their mounts." Instead they grow scared, and a frightened rider makes for an unpredictable horse, a very dangerous combination.

A professional horse dealer will also insist on having the animal thoroughly examined by a veterinarian for evidence of lung disease, arthritis, or other defects, as well as signs of having been treated with drugs. No one wants to have a horse transformed from a docile animal into a highstrung, eyeball rolling bronco two days after the purchase, when the effect of a tranquilizer wears off.

Some ailments and diseases defy simple visual detection and can be slow to surface. An examination by an expert is essential.

The would-be owner who has found the right horse but feels that the price is too steep, can consider one of four different ways to cut the cost of ownership.

The first method is through a partnership—that is, sharing the ownership of the horse with one, two or three other people. This can reduce the cost per individual considerably—but it can also strain friendships. Only one person can ride at a time, and co-owners often want to ride at the same time. According to Philip Ake, "Most successful co-ownerships or multi-ownerships are among people who are seriously involved in showing horses and who own an expensive horse that is used for that purpose mainly." However, partnership in a horse used for pleasure can work out—if the partners agree on all the details ahead of time—for example, who get to ride when, how costs and duties are shared, and who has responsibility for what.

A second way to cut costs is to find a stable that will permit you to board the horse at a discounted rate if you allow it to be used as a school horse—that is, as a horse which they can rent out or give lessons on. This deal works particularly well for those who are limited to riding only in the evenings or on weekends.

Because of the liabilities involved, not every stable will use a privately owned horse. The small local stables, however, often find that the discount works to everyone's advantage and the deal is often sealed with a handshake.

A secondary advantage of this arrangement (aside from the money saved) is that the horse is certain to get enough exercise. However, the disadvantage is that riders of varying degrees of expertise can affect a horse's personality, toughen up his mouth, and make him less responsive to his owner's commands.

A third way to save money on a horse is to bide your time and—believe it or not—see if you can get one for free. Start by making a few contacts with managers of hunt clubs, the U. S. Pony Club, and personnel in local tack shops to see if they know of a horse owner who is being transferred to another part of the country, has a child who has lost interest in his horse, or who has had a "Horse For Sale" advertisement running for a long time. One of these owners may be willing—eager, in fact—to give the horse away simply to cut his losses. One thing most of these horse owners will insist on, however, is assurance that the horse will be properly maintained and cared for.

A final way to reduce costs when buying a horse to to try and get the previous owner to throw in the tack—brushes, blankets, saddle, reins, etc.—before the deal is closed. Often the seller has no intention of getting another horse, so these "accessories" really are of little value to him, and if the prospective buyer acts as though the deal might fall through unless these supplies were included, the owner will give in. As a new owner soon finds out, getting these "extras" at no cost can mean a considerable saving.

When new equipment must be purchased, it is generally best to buy from a local tack shop, rather than from a mail order house. The sales personnel in a local shop are more likely to be experienced riders themselves and, since they hope to have the same customers come back, they tend to be more diligent about making certain the beginner gets the right equipment.

But what if the riding enthusiast can't find a horse for free and is not willing to share his horse with others—either through a partnership or a plan where his horse is used by a school part of the time? If he or she still wants to buy a horse for himself then he should be prepared for all of the actual costs that are involved. He should remember that the $1,500 that he may be willing to spend for a horse can easily become $5,000 by the end of the first year and $8,000 by the end of the second year. How? Like some new cars, a horse arrives "stripped." After the initial $1,500 changes hands, at least $500 more must be spent for equipment — a saddle, bridle, halter, blanket, and brushes, plus the rider's outfit. Board and stabling averages $2,400 a year; horse shoes, $190. Veterinarian examinations once a year with worming and shots cost about $100, and riding lessons once a week (if needed) average $10 each. It all adds up—rapidly. And remember, the horse you have spent $5,000 on during the course of the first year will probably never be worth more than the $1,500 you paid for it in the first place.

RIGHT DRESS micro-plex®

MICRO-PLEX is a micronutrient. Micro means "very small". Nutrient denotes "food". Even though required in small amounts, they still play a major role in plant growth and development.

Green Thumb gardeners know that healthy plants need nitrogen, phosphorus, potassium and lime. You may not know that these alone don't furnish a balanced diet, and that MICRO-PLEX is what you need to help them work better, faster.

MICRO-PLEX is a balanced formula, readily absorbed by lawns and leaf surfaces. With MICRO-PLEX, grass stays greener, plants develop resistance to disease and insects. Ornamentals produce healthier growth, more blooms Vegetables yield sooner.

Ask your garden supply dealer about MICRO-PLEX. Satisfied users of Right Dress ROOT MULCH—that does not blow away or wash away—will welcome this new product from the same maker.

How to keep a good thing growing.

The new Swiss Farms Guide to Growing Better House Plants provides 256 pages of specific, easy-to-understand facts on all important aspects from care, growing and propagating popular plants to decorating with them and curing their ills. This sample page illustrates the book's unique design and indicates the wealth of information included for each plant.

"We recommend this book to all our clients. The Swiss Farms Guide has more thorough information than any other single volume on indoor gardening."
—A leading N.Y. plant supplier.

"The color illustrations are fabulous. With what I've already learned from this book, I was able to save two plants that I might have otherwise thrown out."
—A satisfied user.

Produced by world-renowned plant authority, Elvin McDonald, the book includes more than 290 full-color photographs and an in-depth index. It covers such topics as: What Went Wrong?; Increase Your Plants Without Spending Money; Artificial Light If You Have No Sun—plus 8 more informative chapters. Available for the first time in soft cover at just $3.99 per copy. (Hard cover version sold for $9.95.)

If you enjoy houseplants, you can't afford to be without this book.

Orchards Without Insecticides

A ground swell of gardeners who hesitate to use pesticides on food they raise has stirred a response in the hallowed halls of the United States Department of Agriculture. In reply to those who are concerned about possible contamination of home fruits from the use of chemical sprays, the agricultural professionals have published recommendations on orchard pest control without pesticides. The bulletin does point out that the homeowner "who does not wish to use chemicals may have to learn to tolerate a certain amount of insect damage." The U.S.D.A.'s emphasis is on destruction of egg masses, trapping and screening, some cultural measures such as weed clean-up and debris clean-up and certain biological controls.

Many potential insect problems can be reduced or eliminated by destroying the overwintering and/or nesting places of the pests. For example, one of the most serious apple pests is the apple maggot which burrows into ripening apples, undetected. The infected fruit usually drops prematurely and the larvae inside can mature to infect other fruit. Though a big chore for those with many apple trees, a simple clean-up of the prematurely dropped fruit can help immeasurably in keeping the insect under control.

The bulletin has many practical, welcome ideas and is worth some serious reading. It costs 90 cents and is available from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Specify Home and Garden Bulletin No. 211, "Control of Insects on Deciduous Fruits and Tree Nuts in the Home Orchard Without Insecticides."

Nematodes, Vegetables and Mulches

Nematodes are microscopic worms that are impossible to see in the soil. They feed on plant roots and cause all kinds of problems by sucking the root sap, causing root galls and knots, permitting diseases to enter and transmitting viruses. Their feeding can result in malformed root crops such as carrots, parsnips and the like.

Two scientists, Patrick M. Miller and Saul Rich, working on nematodes at the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station in New Haven found that when new gardens are dug from lawn areas the incidence of nematodes is usually high. This was underscored by testing soil samples requested from neighbors in the vicinity of the station's Lockwood Farm in Hamden. When the samples were checked for seven possible nematode genera, those taken from former turf areas had the most nematodes.

The scientists found out something else, too. The longer the garden is worked and enriched with organic matter, the nematode population is reduced. They also found that mulches such as grass clippings, worked lightly into the soil helped to reduce the nematode population. The researchers caution on the use of grass clippings taken from lawns recently treated with herbicides, however. The chemical residual remains for several weeks and if grass clippings are used on vegetable or flower beds, some damage could occur.

There was one interesting side effect on the nematode research. Rabbits found most of the bean rows on the tests plots quite tasty and ate them down to stubble. But the beans that were mulched with thin black plastic sheeting were untouched. Evidently, the bunnies did not choose to cross the plastic moat.

Crabgrass Control

Last week's record heat wave knocked nature's blooming schedule off balance and flowers started popping out all over. It will behoove gardeners to tend to some chores soon before it is too late. One of these is application of pre-emergent controls for crabgrass. They should be on the lawn surface to penetrate into the soil to control the crabgrass seed before it germinates. Be prompt.

There are several products on the market and they have two names, a trade name and a generic name. Here are the most common ones sold today: Dacthal or DCPA; Betasan or bensulide; Balan or benefin; Tupersan or siduron. The last named, Tupersan, is the only one that can be used safely if new grass seed has been planted. Follow the label instructions carefully.

Answers/Questions

MORE ON PEACH TREE BORER PROBLEM (March 28)

A: The appearance of a large gelantinous mass at the base of the peach tree is a good indication of damage from the peach tree borer. The remedy recommended was a ring of moth (PDB) crystals placed in a ring around the base of the trunk about one-inch from it. The crystals are then covered with soil and allowed to remain. However, because of the vaporizing of the crystals, especially in the warm spring weather, the crystals should be removed in two to three weeks time by taking away the soil mound and raking up the crystals. Usually a fall treatment, a spring application can be made in late April and May if the soil temperature is warm, about 60 degrees. Ed.

CRICKETS INDOORS (April 4)

Mrs. C.F.F., New Castle, N.Y., writes that the crickets in the basement are more than pleasant. She asked for some help in getting rid of them. Mrs. A. G. Hegarty, a New Jersey reader, recommends, "Aluminum pie plates containing beer. Make ramps out of cardboard going up the sides of the plates. The crickets are attracted by the smell of the beer and go up these ramps and fall in and drown."

CHINESE EVERGREEN SEEDS (April 11)

Mrs. H.R., Bronx, N.Y., asked how and when to plant the seed pods growing on her Chinese evergreen plant.

One of the the aroids, related to jack-in-the-pulpit and calla lily, Chinese evergreen (Aglaonema modestum) forms a red berrylike seed pod which should remain on the plant until the color dulls and the fruit is firm. Cut it off and open the seed pod and wash away the pulp from the seeds. Dry on a paper towel and sow the seeds in one of the soilless planting mixes, or vermiculite-perlite mix. Keep moist and warm until the seed germinates in several weeks. Then put in an east or west window and transplant to individual pots when the seedlings are large enough to handle. Ed.

FORSYTHIA IN VERMONT

Q: We planted forsythia last year around our Vermont home and this spring it is all dead. Is forsythia tender in Vermont? Mrs. G.P.C., Cranford, N.J.

FROSTED RASPBERRIES

Two years ago we rejuvenated a red raspberry patch. There was an abundant July crop, but for the past two years the fall crop was killed by frost before we could pick it. Is there a way we can foil nature? J.U., Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y.

MAGNOLIA FROM SEED

We have a 15-year-old southern magnolia (Magnolia grandiflora) surviving on our property and have propagated it by layering bottom branches. But we have never been successful in getting the seeds to sprout. Clues anyone? B.P.T., Bangor, Pa.

Now! Nature's Hero "Eats Up" Destructive Insects in Your Garde

Amazing! This remarkable Praying Mantis helps eliminates destructive insects and the need for dangerous insecticides. Actual size ranges from 3"-5". The mighty Mantis devours thousands of times it's own weight in harmful insects such as aphids, tomato worms, lace bugs, caterpillars, borers, mites, maggots, flies, ants. Now you can help control these insects that ravage your lovely plants, flowers, vegetables, fruits, shrubs and trees and give your garden that unkempt, ugly look.

INSECT PESTS!

Nature's proven method — the amazing Praying Mantis — devours thousands of times it's own weight in dangerous insects. Completely harmless to humans, animals, pets, flowers, plants, trees, vegetables.

New natural control method to maintain nature's balance and safeguard your family's health. Now available for use in your garden and farm. For years, home gardeners have dreamed about a method to help control pesky insects that kill beautiful flowers, plants, fruits and vegetables—without using dangerous chemical sprays or insecticides. Now agricultural experts have made that dream come true! You simply "seed" your garden with precious Praying Mantis eggs. Today this remarkable proven method is in use by large commercial growers of vegetables, fruits, corn, cotton and flowers. Now you can use this easy guaranteed method for only pennies by mailing the coupon below.

IN 24 HOURS THE PRAYING MANTIS CAN DEVOUR HUNDREDS OF APHIDS, BORERS, MITES, CATERPILLARS, AND LACE BUGS AND STILL HAVE ROOM FOR LITTLE BLACK ANTS.

Nature intended the Mantis to eat bugs like a vacuum cleaner whisks away dirt. It has an insatiable hunger for the most bothersome, destructive pests that give your lawn and garden that unkempt look. It is continually eating mites, caterpillars, lace bugs, aphids, borers, flies, lice and hundreds of other harmful bugs you never even see, but which wreak havoc on the valuable plants on your property. The Mantis is like an unpaid laborer working on your property even while you sleep, yet it is completely harmless to humans, animals, pets, flowers, plants, trees and vegetables. Many states enforce laws against killing the Praying Mantis because it is so beneficial and to watch it at work is fascinating for both youngsters and adults alike.

PUT AN ARMY OF MIGHTY MANTISES TO WORK IN YOUR GARDEN

If just one Mantis can eat up all those bugs in just one day, imagine what a "task force" of a few hundred can do in a season. That's why it is called nature's most effective method of insect elimination without the use of dangerous insecticides. Now is the time of year to "plant" Mantis egg cases on your property. These egg cases are about the size of a golf ball. You simply drop an egg case in your vegetable garden, on your lawn, among your fruit trees, near your shrubs, or in your vegetable garden. No mixing, measuring, container disposal. In mid-June the eggs hatch and release hundreds of Praying Manteses. In a few days they begin their daily battle eating up and controlling your insect enemies.

LET NATURE'S METHODS HELP CONTROL INSECTS ON YOUR PROPERTY. SEASON AFTER SEASON.

By acting now you can obtain a professional supply of Mantis egg cases direct from World Garden Products Control Center and at amazing low prices. Mantis egg cases are jammed with hundreds of Praying Mantis eggs. These egg cases are clean, hardy, easy to handle—perfectly designed by Nature. We send complete easy instructions with your order. But because supplies are limited, and we want to insure receipt of your Mantis cases we urge you to mail the coupon now. Each case is carefully packed and guaranteed for perfect arrival in sufficient time for "planting."

WHAT NORTICULTURAL EXPERTS SAY ABOUT THE PRAYING MANTIS IN YOUR GARDEN.

Home Garden Magazine: "The remarkable praying Mantis eliminates destructive pests and maintains nature's balance."

Wall Street Journal: "Beneficial Insects are probably our most valuable ally in pest control."

Organic Gardening: "Biological control can kill bugs without killing, contaminating or polluting anything else."

Prevention Magazine: "As the furor about poisons mounts the Praying Mantis story becomes more meaningful."

House Beautiful: "More and more, home gardeners have started to use this natural method of biological control."

The F.T.C. v. the Four Cereal Giants 'Shared Monopoly' Case Goes to Trial

By LOUIS M. KOHLMEIER

WASHINGTON—Cheerios, rispy Critters, Corn Flakes nd Cap'n Crunch with runchberries are not the tuff of which new antitrust w has generally been made. ut the staff of the Fedral Trade Commission on Wednesday formally will begin its long-awaited attempt o do exactly that.

Four years ago, the commission filed antitrust chares against the four companies that dominate the breakfast cereal industry and its ore than 100 brands. The ase finally is ready for trial efore an administrative law dge. The four, which gether account for more an 90 percent of breakfast ereal sales in the nation, are e Kellogg Company, General Mills Inc., the General oods Corporation and the uaker Oats Company.

The F.T.C. staff wants to break up Kellogg, General Mills and General Foods by requiring each to spin off one or more plants and brands. Quaker Oats, smallest of the four, would not be required to divest. All four, however, would be required to license their brands to other companies.

The Federal antitrust laws never before have been used by the F.T.C. or the Justice Department against what antitrusters call "shared monopoly"—and define as the use of market power by a few large companies to avoid competition, earn monopoly profits and exclude new competition from the industry.

The breakfast cereal case is to open Wednesday before Harry R. Hinkes, an F.T.C. administrative law judge and, if it goes all the way to the Supreme Court, will take still another five years or more to be finally resolved.

But, if Judge Hinkes, and the full commission, and then the courts agree with the F.T.C. staff, the case could set antitrust precedent for attempts to break up companies in the automobile, steel, electrical goods and various other industries dominated by a few large corporations.

The F.T.C. staff also claims that, if it is successful, consumers would save $128 million annually—an estimate based largely on one study of price cutting that followed attempts by Ralston Purina to grab a share of Kellogg's corn flake market.

The four companies vigorously deny the antitrust charges and dispute the theoretical savings.

Americans obviously like ready-to-eat cereals, which consist of corn, wheat, oats, rice or barley that is flaked, puffed, granulated, extruded or shredded.

During an average two-week period, according to the F.T.C., seven out of every 10 Americans douse one brand or another with milk, and down a bowl. Most addicted are children less than 12 years old, who consume 38 percent of cereals; next in usage is the over-45 set.

The industry wholesaled $163 million of cereals in 1950, reports the F.T.C., and more than $650 million in 1970. The big four cereal makers, which accounted for 68 percent of the market in 1940, had taken about 84 percent by 1950, and 91 percent in 1970.

Kellogg is No. 1. Founded in 1906 and based at Battle Creek, Mich., it has 45 percent of the United States cereal market, according to the F.T.C.'s latest figures. Its entries in the brand name competition include Special K., All Bran, Corn Flakes, Sugar Frosted Flakes, Sugar Pops, Apple Jacks and Puffa Puffa Rice. Kellogg had 1975 sales of $1.2 billion and profits of $103 million.

General Mills, which is based at Minneapolis and makes many products, has 21 percent of the cereal market — in the name of Wheaties, Cheerios, Corn Kix, Cocoa Puffs and Lucky Charms. It had 1975 sales of $2.5 billion and earnings of $85 million.

General Foods, based at White Plains, and also a producer of many noncereal products, accounts for 16 percent of the cereal market. Its entries include Grape Nuts, Grape Nuts Flakes, Post Toasties, Raisin Bran, Crispy Critters, Sugar Crisp and Alpha-Bits. Total 1975 sales were $3.9 billion and earnings were $146 million.

Quaker Oats, of Chicago, has taken 9 percent of the cereal market with Puffed Rice, Life, Cap'n Crunch with Crunchberries. Its 1975 sales were $1.5 billion and earnings, $44 million.

The Economy Holds Little Cheer For Democrats

By SOMA GOLDEN

"There must be an economic issue that the Democrats can dig up for the Presidential race—but I'll be darned if I can figure out what it is," said an economist of that party affiliation.

His lament came last week as the national economic recovery marked its twelfth month of life. A surprise to most analysts—and the icing on the birthday cake—came at the middle of last week, when the Government announced that the first quarter of 1976 had been a bouyant one and that the consumer price index had risen only a very mild 2.9 percent, at an annual rate.

Almost no one—in government or out—expected growth in the first three months of this year to be spunky enough to push unemployment down to 7.5 percent, from 8.3 percent in December, or to push real growth of the gross national product to a 7.5 percent annual rate, well above the fourth quarter's 5 percent.

The one prominent analyst who did hit the bullseye with his G.N.P. forecast, Michael K. Evans, president of Chase Econometrics, the consulting subsidiary of the Chase Manhattan Bank, concedes that his winning prediction was right—for the wrong reasons. Inventories were a bit stronger than he had anticipated; net exports, a bit weaker.

The quarter was, by most accounts a smashing one, characterized by rapid growth of consumption, a build-up of inventories, and a slowdown of inflation, as measured by the G.N.P. deflator, to a 3.7 percent annual rate. It capped a recovery year that ranged from "normal" to "good" to "very good"—depending on who is doing the reckoning.

What's more, according to Irwin Kellner, vice president and economist of Manufacturers Hanover Trust, "the recovery is so well-balanced at this point that it should live to celebrate its second anniversary next April.

With luck and skillful policy-making, he said, the recovery might even live to celebrate its third birthday.

That lifespan would not break any records, but it would surpass the 34-month average for peacetime expansions since World War II. Of course, by many measures—the drop in output, the rise in prices and the loss of real income—the last recession was the worst in postwar history, and therefore, merits the longest and sturdiest and sharpest recovery.

One of the grand old men of business cycle analysis, Geoffrey H. Moore, of the private nonprofit National Bureau of Economic Research, thinks the past year of 7 percent average real quarterly growth qualifies as a "sharp rise" out of a sharp recession. "There is a definite correlation—which held for this year—in the sharpness of a drop in the economy and the sharpness of the recovery, for about a year," said Mr. Moore.

Others are not so sure. Otto Eckstein, president of Data Resources Inc., a consulting firm, called the 7 percent average "good growth—but not unique. We got 7 percent for seven quarters in 1971—and from a much lesser recession," he said.

Likewise, Arthur M. Okun, former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under President Johnson, lamented the rate of progress in the last year: "I don't think we've ever had a situation when we've run under water this long in the postwar period."

Mr. Okun, who is now at the Brookings Institution in Washington, scores his fellow economists for their "euphoria" over recent statistics, which have shown real retail sales, after-tax operating profits of nonfinancial business and employment above their prerecession highs. A closer look at the data today, he says, is "disturbing."

Indeed, measured by some key indicators, the United States is still under—even well under—the high-water marks set before the economy collapsed into recession in November 1973.

Housing starts, for instance, have risen some 50 percent from the recession low of 953,000 set last February. But the industry, which generated starts at a 1.4 million annual rate in March, is still operating a fat 42 percent below the cyclical peak of 2.5 million starts registered in October 1972.

Another recovery statistic that can be deceptive is the growth in real spendable earnings of factory workers—take-home pay adjusted for inflation. The is one of the five ged companies in the world, and the best-managed chemical company in the world," says John Henry, a vice president of S. Eberstadt & Company in New York.

"They make tough decisions without delay," he says. "You can get the top five or 10 people in the company in one room, and they can make a decision."

Of course, there's that borrowing. "The big knock on Dow was that they were too highly leveraged," Mr. Henry said, but he went on to observe that the recent years of high profits had curbed some of the worry about the debt.

Mr. Gerstacker's lust for borrowing has run the company's long term debt from $455 million a decade ago to $1.6 billion. Indeed, he once called his chief financial officer "an old lady" for not sharing his passion.

"I think the whole world is committed to inflation and borrowed money is cheaper than equity," he says. Dow's depreciation plus pre-tax income totaled $1.4 billion last year, and for more than 14 times the interest cost of $97 million.

Foreign operations are another factor that Dow men credit for their recent successes. This traces back to about 1960 and involves allowing foreign subsidiaries to run themselves rather than just accept policy from headquarters in Midland, a small Michigan town north and west of Saginaw but south and east of Gaylord.

"We started so far behind everyone else, we knew we had to take a different approach," said C. Benson Branch, Dow's president and the architect of its foreign expansion. "We thought there was a weakness in the other guy's marketing strategy."

Dow begins its operations in a foreign country by importing basic products from the United States and selling them locally. As the market develops, the foreign operation begins producing basic products — meaning basic chemicals—with local marketing people and technicians deciding what their local market will absorb. Dow says a key move begun several years ago was to price its products on replacement costs of material and plants, rather than on straight production costs which meant higher prices initially.

During the years of economic boom, Dow was able to do this because its products were scarce. And when expensive new plants were built and feed stock prices went up, Dow's customers were already used to the high prices.

Foreign operations account for more than 40 percent of the sales and profits and Mr. Branch says that eventually they'll account for one-half.

Dow hasn't been mentioned yet in the recent scandals involving American companies operating abroad, and Mr. Gerstacker says that having high standards "is good business."

"I think honesty is not only good morals and ethics, but it's more profitable. If you pay bribes, the money comes from somewhere. If you have pollution, you're wasting valuable feed stocks. Injuring people (industrial accidents) is expensive; blowing up plan's is expensive." The chairman, however, says he sees nothing wrong with paying a few dollars to low level government employees—abroad, of course — such as customs agents to get them to do their jobs.

Dow was established in 1897 by Herbert Dow to exploit the Midland area's large underground deposits of brine. Using scrap lumber as boiler fuel—Midland was in the old lumber country—he extracted bromine, which could be used medicinally among other purposes, from the brine, and later learned to extract chlorine, slowly diversifying.

Today Dow's business is split among: inorganic chemicals, such as bromine, caustic soda and chlorine used as chemical intermediates and, for example, in the production of paper and for paint removers; organic chemicals used as solvents and automobile antifreeze; and production of the light metal, magnesium. These account for about 56 percent of the company's volume.

Honeywell Bull: Episodes in Swiss Finance

ter Being efrauded, Question Bribes

BY HYDE H. FARNSWORTH

ZURICH—A picture of cor- fraud, sloppy interna- financing practice— ust possibly the bribing blic officials—is com- to focus in this Swiss tale involves the for- financial officer of a subsidiary of well Bull Corporation, ajor French-American any; through his ma- ions $10 million was lifted from banks, in- s and the company. he officer—caught and sed—has been singing local district attorney, his song is that the y of public officials to a sale is common. In bly unusual move, a ember special parlia- ary commission began week the investigation e charges of corporate y of the city's officials. cast of the Zurich case includes: and Stämpfli, a 37-year- iss citizen and formerly ial director of Honey- ull's Zurich subsidiary, vas arrested, confessed rgery and fraud and 11 months in jail last fter his arrest, although s not yet been formal- victed of any crimes. npiero Antognazza, 's district attorney been questioning offi- of the company and ty on the alleged brib-

Ernst Hieber, the Zur- ent of a Canadian firm bious reputation and ead of the legal depart- of a miniscule Zurich bank that was reportedly the funnel for the missing money.

And, of course, Honeywell Bull, headquartered in Paris but owned by Honeywell Inc. of Minneapolis, Machines Bull, the French computer company, and the General Electric Company. Honeywell Bull is soon to be merged into a French government-owned computer company with the aim of weakening I.B.M. in Europe.

Swiss law differs from American, and though Mr. Stämpfli was arrested, all information, even the names of two others arrested, still is sealed. But an internal Zurich police document which became available to The New York Times said that the case was "a classic example of a fraud in which what is called the financial underworld participates." In addition, Mr. Stämpfli talked freely to a reporter about the case, and official investigators also have been interviewed, although they ask not to be quoted.

The fraud and missing $10 million are quite distinct from the corporate bribery charges, which come from Mr. Stämpfli and which are now being investigated.

"Don't make too much of it," Mr. Stämpfli begged a reporter. "I don't want to get into any more trouble, or cause trouble for Honeywell," he said when interviewed in the threadbare office of an oil burner servicing company he now manages.

The Zurich civic administration spent $10 million for Honeywell installations between 1969 and 1974 and is the company's biggest client in Switzerland.

"Bribery was common practice and what Honeywell spent was chickenfeed," Mr. Stämpfli told a reporter. He said that as far as he knew the amounts changing hands in Zurich "never totaled more than 100,000 Swiss francs," or $40,000, when he was financial director of Honeywell Bull in Zurich.

It was always handled discreetly, he said. "Nothing ostentacious. A nice dinner and then a few thousand francs in the bank account," with the payoffs concealed in the financial records as "sales promotion" or "technical aid" and the like.

He added that once in 1973 he and another officer went to Vienna and in the lobby of the Intercontinental Hotel slipped an envelope with 60,000 Swiss francs ($25,000) to an Austrian official. The Zurich office had sales responsibility for Austria.

His most serious charge, being investigated, involves alleged overcharging of the city of Zurich by 1 million Swiss francs in 1973 and 1974.

He admits he told the district attorney that bills for services not performed were accepted by the city after Honeywell Bull was tipped off by city insiders that Zurich had surplus funds that could be earmarked for its computer spending program.

"It had become such a widespread practice it almost became a joke" to work up phony services for which the city could be billed, he said.

"I say categorically that no bribes have been paid," insists Joseph Grandi, general manager of Honeywell Bull's Zurich unit and Mr. Stämpfli's superior in the past.

A Honeywell spokesman in Minneapolis denies any Zurich bribery, although the company admits $1.8 million was paid abroad from 1971 through 1975 "primarily in connection with specific sales to customers in the public and private sectors" or to speed up "official actions."

This spending was at variance with company policy, the American corporation says, and senior management had no prior knowledge of it although it was recorded in the financial records.

In Paris, Maxime Bonnet, general manager of affiliates for Honeywell Bull, says: "On bribes our position is very clear. As far as we know and our accounting people know, we did not pay any bribes in Switzerland or Austria."

As to the charge of overcharging Zurich, Mr. Bonnet says: "We did not invoice the city of Zurich any sum which was not specified in the contract. We never had any complaints."

Mr. Stämpfli, he charges, is "utilizing all means to divert attention from the real point, which was his responsibility in the fraud."

The investigation of that fraud brought about Mr. Stämpfli's arrest for suspicion of fraud and imprisonment for 11 months. He has confessed, was released from jail, at least for the present, late last year and has not yet formally been tried.

That fraud began six years ago.

In 1970, when Mr. Stämpfli became financial director of Honeywell Bull Zurich, according to the police document, underworld figures approached and offered him the post of chairman of a small oil burner servicing company, Afta-Thalmann, A.G.

He accepted—while keeping his job at Honeywell Bull—and the police say, the underworld figures "were clever enough" to get him to put $40,000 of his own into the little company. But he soon realized that more money was needed to make the venture profitable. His partners told him that if he signed Honeywell's guarantee on $500,000 in notes for loans to two shady companies, he could make a killing. Within a year the $500,000 and the two shady companies were gone. Honeywell Bull paid off the notes as Mr. Stämpfli "camouflaged the sum by falsifying the books," the police said.

To clear these losses he was offered another chance for a killing, this one to finance a machine that would make the blind see. He endorsed $1.5 million in notes in Honeywell Bull's name. "Soon enough," the police report said "the machine turned out to be useless" and again Mr. Stämpfli had Honeywell pay off the notes.

Now he was in for $2 million, and his partners explained how he could make it up and grow rich, too, by issuing Honeywell Bull promissory notes for $8 million. For these he also forged a second official's signature.

"I admit that I did some things that were wrong," Mr. Stämpfli told a reporter, "but they (Honeywell) knew the situation," he insists, a claim denied by Honeywell.

The new $8 million, Mr. Stämpfli says, was to go to International Chemalloy. This company was promoted as a "space age" metals firm, was listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange, had a record of three cases of stock manipulation against it and was in receivership by February 1975. Where the $8 million went is a bit vague.

In addition, it's been learned that the notes were denominated in German marks.

The money was supposed to move to Chemalloy through a Liechtenstein company known as Intraholding Establishment. Chemalloy's Zurich agent was Dr. Ernst Hieber who also was legal adviser to Intraholding and also head of the legal department of the Handelskredit Bank in Zurich, founded in 1970 with a capital of only $8,000. A Canadian receiver's report on Chemalloy noted information that Zurichers "were involved in the forging and distribution of these notes through the facilities of the Handelskredit Bank." Another lawyer for that bank said in an interview that his institution "always acted within the bounds of Swiss laws."

Dr. Hieber says he believed that Intraholding was a corporate offspring of Honeywell Bull, and that the money was going to Chemalloy to be used to develop natural gas leaseholds in Texas.

By February of last year Chemalloy was gone and the $8 million was gone (plus the $2 million paid off earlier by doctoring Honeywell's books). But the holders of the $8 million in notes wanted their money, Honeywell of Minneapolis was on to the trouble and asked the Zurich district attorney to investigate, Mr. Stämpfli was arrested.

The banks that bought the paper aren't happy. They include: the Bishops International Bank of London, a consortium bank whose main stockholders are the Royal Bank of Canada and the National Westminster Bank of London; Algemeine Finanz und Waren Treuhand, controlled by the Credit Anstalt, a state-owned institution that is Austria's biggest bank; Bank Oppenheim-Pierson International of Luxembourg, a consortium bank of Pierson, Heldring and Pierson of Amsterdam and Sal. Oppenheim Jr. and Cie of Cologne; and the Société Lyonnaise de Dépots et de Crédit Industriel of Lyon.

They're all suing Honeywell Bull.

A Honeywell spokesman in Minneapolis said the notes were forged or falsely issued and in court papers answering the banks Honeywell denies any obligation to honor them.

The issue, of course, is assuming the $8 million can't be recovered, does Honeywell Bull have an obligation to pay the banks holding the notes.

Honeywell Bull, headquartered in Paris, noted the fraud in its annual report last year, saying:

"Management and legal counsel are not presently in a position to predict the eventual outcome of this matter and any claims that many ensue, or to evaluate the possible effects if any on the stated financial position and operating results of the Honeywell Bull group."

The company refused to discuss the bribe charges at first but after the establishment of the special Swiss commission, Mr. Bonnet, the Honeywell Bull official, denied any bribe giving or phony invoices, adding that his company is ready to testify before the commission. "We will be happy to do so because we have nothing to hide," he said.

And in Zurich, District Attorney Antognazza warns that if he can prove that Zurich's purchase of Honeywell Bull equipment was dictated by other than openly competitive considerations, then the consequences for the guilty parties will be serious.

of the hundred-and-one other hazards in an industrial environment.

Now, claims are being made by—and awarded to—another occupational segment — executives, managers and other white-collar sorts, many of whom have never lifted anything heavier than a letter in triplicate.

They are receiving benefits in the form of medical care, family support and rehabilitation services under a growing liberal interpretation by the courts and compensation boards that the word "injury" means not only bodily hurts but also emotional or psychic scars that stem from job stress.

The expanded view of what is a "compensable wound" is part of an evolving judicial social policy illustrated by the following comment made last year by Justice Theodore Souris of the Michigan Supreme Court:

"Is a worker unable to work because of a mental or emotional injury caused by his employment to be treated differently from a worker unable to work because of a physical injury caused by his employment? I think not."

Not all judges agree that white-collar traumas are necessarily job-induced and automatically qualify the victim for compensation.

A case in point is one of a few years ago which involved the well-known New York men's store, Barney's. It seems that a salesman and his boss frequently wrangled over whether or not the employee had correctly calculated his overtime. One day while both had been arguing the point with some vigor for about 20 minutes, the salesman was laid low with severe chest pains. Later diagnosis revealed that he suffered a heart injury.

The Compensation Board in New York ruled that the heart attack resulted from the excitement and aggravation of the argument, but the insurance company representing Barney's appealed the ruling—and the board's verdict was overruled in court.

The strain that the salesman underwent and the tension of the argument were no greater, it said, "than the countless differences and irritations to which workers are occasionally subjected without untoward results. The employee had not undergone an aggravated and prolonged situation of emotional pressure which would make his attack a casualty of his occupation."

On the other hand, a confrontation between an employer, the Micro-Stamping Company of Teaneck, N.J., and a union official, has been ruled to be "no ordinary spat". The Superior Court of New Jersey was called upon to affirm or deny workers' compensation to a shop steward who had been participating in a collective bargaining session.

As often happens in such sessions, tempers had flared, voices risen and threats and counterthreats flown as the clock was ticking toward a strike deadline. Suddenly the union officer clutched his chest and keeled over. His attack proved to be so severe that it was diagnosed as a permanent disability. The court last June granted the shop steward a weekly stipend for life.

Precedent-watchers concerned with the impact of job wear-and-tear on an executive's alcohol intake are keeping an eye peeled for the outcome of the case of Newell v. the Ford Motor Company—filed last year but yet to be heard.

Mr. Newell was once a $70,000-a-year manager at the Philco Company. When that ailing concern was taken over by Ford, the automaker sent in a corps of troubleshooters in an effort to take the red out of the bottom line. According to Mr. Newell, constant clashes between himself and the Ford contingent started in 1968. After a while, according to Mr. Newell's charge, he was put in "inactive limbo"—which was "a contributing factor to my later succumbing to alcoholism".

Mr. Newell is suing for more than a million dollars in damages in addition to workers' compensation.

Excessive smoking as a job-related illness has not yet raised much sympathy among judges and commissions. However, charges of "this job made me a chain-smoker" did help win a case decided by a California compensation board in 1974.

Ironically the dispute involved the widow of a lawyer who had been a specialist in workers' compensation. It seems that her husband became so overwhelmed with work that he turned into a three-packs-a day smoker. He developed lung cancer and died.

Ruled the Board: "The long hours involved, the number of cases handled, the numerous telephone calls and the heavy workload particularly after an associate left the firm, increased cigarette consumption and was a contributing factor in the development of lung cancer."

The widow was granted an award of $17,500 plus funeral, medical and legal expenses.

The drug problem has not escaped the venue of workers' compensation either. The issue crops up when an employee receives a physical injury on the job and the pain is not alleviated through normal medical treatments.

For example, a young woman took a bad spill while walking down a flight of stairs on her way to the company's lunch room. Her back was injured and it was close to a year before she was able to return to work. During her absence, she received workers' compensation. But her troubles were not over when she became an employee again.

Her pains continued and she began to take larger doses of pills. Some she obtained by prescription—and others by way of the drug black market.

Her doctor and family realizing that she had become an addict suggested that she enter a rehabilitation center. She agreed and applied for compensation to help pay for her hoped-for cure. The insurance company refused, alleging that her condition—drug addiction—was not job related. In this instance it was, ruled the Supreme Court of Rhode Island two months ago.

"Drug addiction intended to cure or relieve an original physical injury is a work-related disability," the court said.

How high will airlines fly in '76?

The airline industry is showing all the signs of a dramatic earnings turnaround. After posting a loss of $98 million last year, airline profits are estimated in the $200-$250 million range for 1976.

Contributing factors are a surge in traffic, stabilizing fuel prices, reduced debt, increased cash positions.

Our new report on the airline industry details the facts and gives our estimates of individual carrier earnings for 1976 with 1975 comparisons. You'll learn about American, Airlines, Braniff International, Continental Airlines, Delta Air Lines, Eastern Air Lines, National Airlines, Northwest Airlines, Pan American, Trans World, UAL, Inc., Western Air Lines.

This special report is important reading for any investor, so call or write now for your free copy.

Xerox Feels Pressure From Kodak

By ROBERT METZ

Xerox, a favorite on Wall Street and a dominant force in the photocopier market for two decades, is threatened by a tough new competitor with longstanding expertise in the graphics field.

Eastman Kodak, which once dominated the copier business with a wet-process machine, has announced an array of new features for the plain-paper, dry-process copiers it introduced last year in direct competition with Xerox.

What Kodak has done is to add impressive automatic feed and collating features that it regards as superior to those available with the present Xerox machines. At the same time I.B.M., another major competitor, is also nibbling at Xerox's 80 percent share of the plain-paper copier market.

As a result, questions have arisen about the investment potential for Xerox stock. Marvin Saffian, who analyzes both Kodak and Xerox for E. F. Hutton & Company, had this to say about the competitive situation in the industry:

"I.B.M. has brought its financial muscle to bear, but the company has never done anything technologically elegant in the field. Kodak's new developments represent the first time Xerox has been outfoxed technologically."

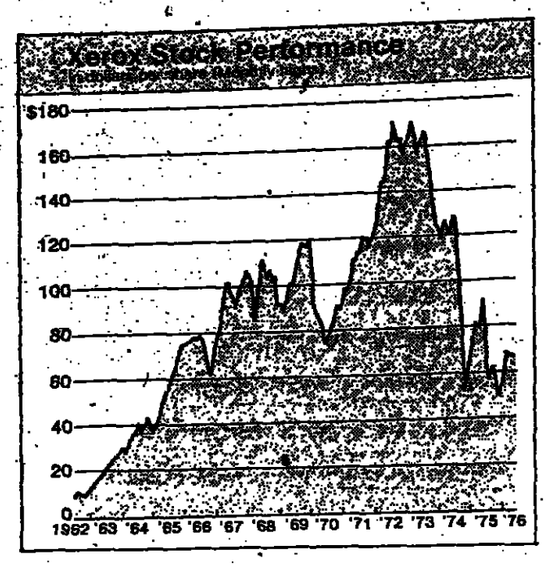
Mr. Saffian went on to say that Kodak's development was the kind of thing a bright schoolboy might have conceived. Kodak's automatic feeding devices make complete copies of booklets, speeches and so forth, one after another, in sequence.

In contrast, Xerox machines run off all copies of page one, and the collator then drops the copies into bins as they leave the machine. Page two then moves onto the photographic screen for its full run. Obviously, no booklet or multi-page document can be completed until copies of the last page begin reaching the bins.

There has long been a feeling in some quarters of Wall Street that Xerox is a great company—but no longer a great stock. This impression arose after years of earnings gains running to 25 percent annually began to fade due to growing competition and market saturation.

Recent pressure on Xerox stock reportedly followed a decision by Baker, Weeks & Company, a leading research firm, to change its appraisal of Xerox on Tuesday morning, March 30—the day before Kodak announced its copier refinements.

However, Gene Glazer, whose principal function at Baker, Weeks is to follow Xerox, said the stock was still on the firm's recommended list. What happened, he said, was that the firm suggested that clients might wait until after Kodak's showing before adding to Xerox holdings.



Nevertheless, Xerox reacted because Baker, Weeks had been recommending the stock "all the way down from 150," as one analyst put it. Xerox has since traded as low as 50⅜. It hovered around 53 on Friday after rebounding in response to the release of a favorable first-quarter earnings report on Tuesday.

"Baker Weeks got scared, turned negative and that started the selling," the analyst added.

Quite the contrary, Mr. Glazer said: "We never dropped Xerox from our recommended list and we are recommending the stock now."

If Wall Street did become disenchanted with Xerox's long-term prospects, there could be a profound effect on the price of the shares. The Standard & Poor's Stock Guide lists 580 institutions holding nearly 9 percent of Xerox's 79 million shares outstanding. S.&P. includes the holdings of mutual funds and insurance companies but not those of banks and pension funds.

The latter organizations have long favored Xerox as one of the so-called "nifty-fifty" stocks. In fact, Xerox is one of the most popular issues of all time and has made millionaires of many of its most ardent supporters during years of growth that led a number of stock splits.

But the future may be less rosy than the past. Bigness, limited markets and competition will have an impact. The question is just how much less rosy the future will be. The company could continue to dominate the market, though not impressively as in the past—and it could continue to earn strong i its.

At present, Xerox is c ing on its model 9200 ing machines, which are enough and econo enough to encroach on offset-printing market help it regain thrust. T is substantial support in Street for Xerox's pr efforts and a number of lysts believe the sto cheap at current price

One analyst who not to be identified sai Kodak's machines wer pressive, but that it rem to be seen whether would automatically be to feed and collate w chewing up documents the others, however, h that the more serious siderations from X standpoint were relat pricing.

A major factor in X future success will rel its ability to penetra offset printing busines Wall Street will be wa eagerly to see whethe nology involving iron and magnetics can forcefully into that are market is estimated perhaps 10 times as la the office copying ma

Meanwhile, Xerox continues to reflect th pany's competitive p and its disappointing ings. In 1975, Xerox $3.07 a share, down $4.18 in 1974. The c could earn $4.20 in whopping gain over 1 only a slight increa 1974.

Morton Adler, one ox's earliest fans wealthy individual who bought the stoc ago just after xer was perfected, comm "I think the worst I still own almost al shares. I think the c will prosper."

Economy Rebounding

simple story is that the seasonally adjusted figure, in 1962 dollars, has risen from a low of $87.59 a week last April, to $91.56 this March. The latter figure put factory pay just 6.4 percent shy of the last cyclical high registered in October 1972.

"But a careful look at the data a few cycles further back casts a somewhat different light on the subject. The first time factory workers managed to take home between $91 and $92 for a week's work—as they are doing now—was not in October 1972, but in February 1965, more than a decade ago. Since then, earnings have flowed and ebbed, and flowed again—but they have not grown.

It is this kind of numbers game that is likely to be played with a vengeance in the 1976 election year.

To the Democrats, by and large, the cup is half empty.

To the Republicans, the cup is half full.

And they both, of course, are right.

For the voters, much will depend on how they perceive the shape of the recovery during the seven months remaining before the November election. Chances are that by then growth will be higher and unemployment lower than most analysts had earlier expected — good for the G.O.P.

After the year's fast start, Mr. Eckstein, for one, says he will probably push his 1976 forecast for G.N.P. growth to "near 7 percent" from 6.4 percent that he predicted just a month ago.

The President's Council of Economic Advisers also seems somewhat more hopeful. Just a few weeks ago, 6.5 percent real growth seemed the best the country could squeeze out in 1976.

"The chances of being over that are much greater now than they were before we got the first-quarter numbers," said one Council staffer.

At first blush, one component of the new statistics did cause some worry. That was the sudden and surprisingly rapid accumulation of inventories.

During the first quarter, nonfarm inventories piled up at a $14.1 billion annual rate —a sharp turnaround after a year of declines and after the fourth quarter's $2 billion rate of reduction.

But the entire inventory buildup during the January-March period came in the nondurables goods sector, which includes clothing, dry goods, foods and the like.

"The behavior in the first quarter was perfectly rational," said A. Gary Shilling of White, Weld & Company after analyzing the new data. "Nondurable industries were the first to liquidate their inventories during the recession and therefore, they are the earliest to rebuild them.

Most analysts agree that the big buildup in inventories, which accounted for about 4 percent of the period's 7.5 percent growth is not likely to be repeated in the second. That means growth of output in the months ahead will have to come from other sectors.

Most analysts expect some added boost in this current quarter to come from net exports, which were dragged down unusually hard in the first few months of the year by a rise in oil imports in the wake of the tariff removal late in 1975.

Other pluses are expected from consumption, which showed great strength in the first quarter, and from business investment, a sector that economists expect to come on strong late this year and early in 1977.

Inflation, of cou mains the hobgoblin economics professi no analyst—with the tion of Mr. Shilling— inflation, measured broad G.N.P. deflato main in the 3.5 to 4 range registered in t quarter.

They insist that the low in virtually all t indexes reflects drops and fuel prices that ready being reverse

They also point to a in commodity prices— has not yet entered the jor price indexes—as ominous leading indicat— future inflation

And there is mounting cern about wage pressure prices now that both Teamsters and rubber w ers have struck for—an the Teamsters case w sizable wage gains.

Yet, at worst, inflatio 1976 is expected to be in 6 percent vicinity, better the 8.8 percent registere the deflator last year. that seems fine with n economists.

While the politicians the battling, the analysts enjoying the unfamiliar t quility that has settled the United States econo Perhaps Alan Greens chairman of the Preside Council of Economic Ad ers, explained this best i recent visit to New Y City.

When asked what, if a thing, was worrying him the outlook these days, Greenspan—a man who te toward caution—said, difficult to find a really ma concern. This is one of th very rare times in the b ness cycle, usually about h way through the recov when there's enough data confirm the momentum the recovery and nothing indicate any imbalances t might end it."

Even Mr. acker, though not a member of the founding family, is a nephew of one of the founder's early financial backers. The chairman will be 60 in August and is expected to retire later this year. Dow's policy calls for officer-directors to hold their jobs until age 60, or until 10 years after the last promotion, whichever comes later. Mr. Gerstacker became chairman in 1960.

Mr. Branch considers himself a frustrated archeologist and says he'd be in the field had there been a way to make a living at it. He even likes to unearth his own past failures because he says it shows the company's character.

"I can say I lost more money for the company than anyone," he said. "But they always picked me up, dusted me off and sent me back into the battle."

"People need failures," says Mr. Branch, "to give them the humility to make them bearable to their peers."

His favorite failure came in 1952 when his plan to use weed spray on cotton fields in Texas backfired, damaged cotton, and ended with Dow paying about a quarter-million dollars to angry farmers.

There is still a strong family influence in the big company. Two of the founder's grandsons and the husband of a granddaughter are members of the board, giving the family 3 of the 15 directorships.

And the company likes its officers and 53,100 employees to be closely tied to the company through stock holdings.

"Every Dow employee should be a stockholder; he should own no other stock, and he should be in debt," the chairman says.

According to the latest proxy statement, Mr. Gerstacker owns 325,745 Dow shares worth about $35 million. "I owe a lot of money, but I have a lot of assets," he said.

None of the Dow directors to be reelected to the board next month has fewer than 18,000 shares of Dow stock, or about $2 million worth. Mr. Branch, the president, owns 50,000 shares or $5 million worth.

Until about 10 years ago, Dow — which runs its own electric and steam generating plants in addition to a huge chemical operation in Midland—was one of Michigan's worst polluters.

However, according to the Michigan Department of Natural Resources, Dow has made great progress in cleaning up generating plant emissions which now meet state clean air standards.

These days Dow is fighting not only to end its own pollution, but to profit from other people's pollution problems. The company has devised what it says is a nonpolluting chemical to replace the heavily criticized pollutant polychlorinated biphenyl or P.C.B., in some industrial applications, and also has a nonpolluting substitute for freon, a fluorocarbon used in aerosol sprays that are suspected of harming the earth's ozone layer.

Mr. Gerstacker feels that efforts such as these show Dow can be a good corporate citizen wherever it operates, and can make money at it.

The company also is proud of its treatment of stockholders, and brags that it raised its dividends in each of the past 16 years and is "the only U.S. industrial company, to our knowledge, never to have reduced its dividends since it began paying them regularly in 1911."

Why Do You Own The Securities You Own?

A hunch? Your broker's call? A hot tip? Whatever the reason, you've put together a portfolio that today may be making money, but perhaps doesn't make a lot of sense.

For example, you might have a number of highly volatile stocks, but your personal financial objectives may call for a low-risk portfolio with long-term goals.

Or perhaps you have investments that aren't working together—or worse, canceling each other out.

At Sanford C. Bernstein & Co., Inc., our job is to manage your total investment mix so that it makes sense with respect to your personal financial objectives.

Sometimes, that means more than just being in stocks. It may mean using a combination of treasury bills, bonds, options, or other investment alternatives.

Of course, when we make such decisions, we make them only for you. And all of our clients receive that same personalized attention.

So that you can decide if our way can better help you meet your financial objectives, we would like to send you a copy of our Policy and Procedures Manual.

Just fill in the coupon below or call us at (212) 486-6723, and we'll send one immediately. It may be the best decision you've ever made.

Chicago Banker Goes West

The New York Times/Sandy Solomon

Chauncy E. Schmidt conducting a recent BanCal board meeting.

By STANLEY STRACHAN

SAN FRANCISCO—When Chauncey Schmidt left the No. 2 job at the ...st National Bank of Chicago to take ... as chief executive at the problem-...lled Bank of California, he told a ...nd he would "sit still for three ...nths" before taking any corrective ...ion.

But when the three-month period ...led at the beginning of this month, ... was evident that the 44-year-old ...sident had found it impossible to ...lly sit still. Perhaps most important, ...l at the same time delicate, was Schmidt's decision after just one ...nth to have directors cut the bank's ...ual dividend by 55 percent, to 60 ...ts a share.

"The tremors came back from the ...ney market pretty quick," he told ...ecent interviewer. "People don't see ... move as a capital builder: they ...k simply that if a bank has to ... its dividend there must be some-...g very wrong."

One reason for Mr. Schmidt's decision ...speed up on changes may well have ...n the continued rapid deterioration ... the bank's earnings. For the first ...ee months this year, the bank earned ... $280,000, down from $2.38 million ...ear earlier. Also during the first quar-... $11 million in loans stopped earning ... million in loans stopped earning ...rest for the bank, on top of the ... million on a total portfolio of ...6 billion that had stopped earning ...erest as of the end of 1975.

Mr. Schmidt sees the slash in the ...idend as a crucial step in building ...base from which earnings can flow. ... the next five years, Mr. Schmidt ...s, the dividend cut alone will add ...8 million to the bank's capital posi-...n.

While a number of banks—some a ...eat deal bigger than BanCal's $2.8 ...llion in assets—have had well-report-... troubles in recent months, perhaps ... no other major institution have the ...oblems—including rapid turnover in ... presidency—been so easy for out-...lers to see.

"For years, they decided wherever ...y went to go on a first-class basis ...ly," said one bank security analyst. ... a result, the bank has a $58 million ...estment in facilities, far beyond the ...quirements of its 82-branch network.

Mr. Schmidt describes the offices ... "marble palaces," and has not sat ...ll on that problem either.

On one San Francisco building alone, ... bank currently is renegotiating a ...se, anticipating savings of $3.5 mil-...n over its tenancy. It also has been ...ving operations and other staff from ... expensive new headquarters building ... downtown San Francisco to less ...stly quarters—in order to make room ... rent-paying tenants.

Mr. Schmidt also is planning to close ...r sell off—branches. One in Holly-...od, a money-loser, will be combined ...th two other, profitable, offices. He ...ks of "packaging" offices for sale, ...sumably to other banks, "perhaps ...o good ones and one that's losing ...ney, with the investor taking the ...ole package."

At the same time, there are areas ...ere Mr. Schmidt sees potential for ...panding the bank's facilities over ...e. His California-based bank, found-... in 1864, has been in Oregon and ...ashington since 1905—long before ...nking was restricted by law to a ...gle state—and is thus unique among the nation's banks in having operations in three states.

Although its service area extends "border to border" along the West Coast, however, it has never taken full advantage of that fact. In Oregon, it has just one branch, in Portland. In Washington, it has three, two in Seattle and one in Tacoma. While bankers in those cities can be expected to argue the question—in court, most likely—Mr. Schmidt believes BanCal legally could expand this base.

"I just found out when I went up there for a visit that we had a policy against our officers calling on companies around Oregon," he says. This has been corrected, he adds.

The bank itself is a subsidiary of the BanCal Tri-State Corporation, of which Mr. Schmidt is chairman, a holding company formed in 1972 to enter non-banking businesses. Along with many other banks, however, it found the outside interests unprofitable in times of credit scarcity, particularly in real estate.

In 1975, nonbank operations resulted in a charge to earnings of 56 cents a share, of which 51 cents represented the loss at the BanCal Tri-State Mortgage Company. The annual report tells of a $20.1 million investment "in real estate development in nine states from loans originally assembled in 1973" for a proposed real estate investment trust. This portfolio was "intended to be short-lived [but] as the troubles from the real estate industry grew, some of the original borrowers were unable to meet repayment schedules and the corporation foreclosed on certain properties."

The foreclosures have left the bank with $9.9 million in real estate owned. Of the original $20.1 million, on which the bank or its subsidiaries continue to pay market rates, only $2.8 million currently is earning interest.

One key factor in BanCal recovery could be the presence of Baron Edmond de Rothschild of Paris as its largest shareholder. The French banker personally and through a wholly owned Delaware company, the Lafayette Corporation, started buying stock in the bank holding company in 1974 and now owns 26 percent.

Mr. Schmidt describes the Baron as "a very cooperative partner," and points to his acceptance of the dividend slash as demonstrating long-term concern. "He really wants the bank to develop into a top-rank institution," Mr. Schmidt said.

Last fall, when BanCal was hard-pressed for cash, the Lafayette company loaned it $8 million, which is due July 1, but can be extended to next January at the option of management.

The array of problems facing BanCal proved too much for James H. Jones, a New Orleans banker who joined BanCal in mid-1975 with a reputation as a "mover and shaker" Mr. Jones lasted only until Nov. 4, when his resignation was accepted. William S. Pfeifle, who had been president since January 1973 and with the bank 18 years, quit at the year-end.

When Mr. Jones departed, Charles de Bretteville, who shaped the policies of the bank over the past decade and is all but retired, took over as temporary chief executive while the board began searching again for a top officer.

Prior to hiring Mr. Jones, the bank had offered the job to Robert K. Wilmouth, one of several in-house executives who had lost out in the struggle to succeed Gaylord A. Freeman in 1974 as chairman of the $19 billion First National Bank of Chicago. Mr. Wilmouth, a First Chicago executive vice president, journeyed to San Francisco to meet with the board. However, he also had a lunch meeting with Thomas R. Wilcox, a former vice chairman of Citibank in New York, who had just taken over as chairman of the Crocker National Bank in San Francisco. Mr. Wilcox offered Mr. Wilmouth, and Mr. Wilmouth accepted, the presidency of Crocker.

Mr. Schmidt became the object of the second recruiting effort, and signed on for a $200,000 annual salary, quite high for banking. His wife, Anne, and their three children have, he says, enjoyed the change from Chicago.

A former colleague in Chicago describes Mr. Schmidt as "extremely ambitious; secretive; hard working, and market-oriented rather than analytical."

Mr. Schmidt will be able "to find a proper niche for the Bank of California," adds the former colleague. The fact that "he is going into a situation where the problems already are widely recognized will help, since he won't see any setback as reflecting on his own abilities."

BanCal has long had a reputation as conservative lender and its commercial account list includes a number of the country's top companies. According to one colleague, Mr. Schmidt is "likely to swing a little more," with *aggressive and innovative lending poli*cies.

Mr. Schmidt himself, however, talks of lending growth in traditional areas. This may be because the bank's market penetration is lower than he is used to so that growth can be realized without reaching very far.

Mr. Schmidt hopes to be able to tap the equity and debt markets once "we get some of our problems out of the way and clean up the balance sheet." He thinks that if management can point to specific areas and say "we got rid of that and it was costing us so much a share," it can win the confidence of the market and raise capital on an ongoing basis. He stresses that "we're going to need capital."

Another track-record breaker

WOMETCO ENTERPRISES, INC. REPORTS ITS BEST FIRST QUARTER EVER.

EARNINGS PER SHARE UP 53% SALES UP 18%

And these record results follow our best year, when per share earnings increased 34%.

And they're compared to another record first quarter, 1975, when earnings increased 21% over still another record first quarter the year before.

But good results come as no surprise for Wometco when you consider our track record:

- Never a loss year in 51 years of business.
- A compound annual growth rate of net income of 12.9% over the past decade.
- 68 consecutive quarterly cash dividends since Wometco became a public company in 1959.
- 17 dividend increases in the past 17 years.
- 6 stock dividends or splits since 1962 (and a proposed 3-for-2 split, subject to the approval of the Board of Directors on April 26).

We believe this outstanding track record is due to our policy of balanced growth in four leisure-time industries—broadcasting, Coca-Cola bottling, *vending and entertain*ment. All four provide products and services that will always be in universal demand because they are low in cost, quickly used up, easily replaced and make people's lives happier.

Add to this our excellent liquidity and our location in growth markets, and it is easy to see why we are very optimistic about continuing our track record (even if not always so sensationally as the last quarter).

Presenting HOLT'S Specific Guidelines:

OPTION SPREADS
How to take Advantage of an UP or DOWN market

A special option-trading approach called "spreading"—simultaneously buying and writing options on the same underlying stock—enables traders to go after sizable profits in call options in a rising or falling market.

Spreading can reduce the risk inherent in options, without cutting the potentials too much, and usually requires a smaller capital outlay than straight option buying or shorting—adding another dimension to the leverage.

HOW IT WORKS

In the simplest spread (which we recommend) you buy an option on a stock at one striking price and, at the same time, write an option on the same stock at a different striking price. Both have the same expiration date.

Normally, writing (or shorting) an option on a stock you don't own lies up a lot of money and involves unlimited risk. But in a spread, your maximum risk is explicitly known.

A spread can be tailored to a rising or a declining stock. In the current market, we think the more appropriate is the bearish spread—meaning the option you write is your primary bet, and the option you buy is your hedge.

BOOSTING THE ODDS

You can increase the odds in your favor by following Holt's number one "rule" for successful spreading:

At the time you establish a spread, the option you write (or short) should be overpriced and the option you buy should be underpriced.

How do you tell? For every option on the CBOE and AMEX, THE HOLT OPTION SELECTOR regularly presents a Projected Option Value (POV) curve—plotting our estimate of the option's normal market value in relation to the price of its underlying stock. If the option is currently priced above its curve, we consider it overvalued; if below, undervalued.

With regularly updated POV curves in front of you—together with Holt's latest price/volume/moving average charts for each of the underlying stocks—you can readily spot new opportunities for spreads as they develop. (You also get separate charts of 21 key market indicators, updated every week.)

SPECIFIC GUIDELINES

Holt's new Special Study on Option Spreads clearly shows how bearish and bullish spreads work and sets forth specific trading guidelines:

- Which particular options you should use if you expect the underlying stock to go down.
- Which particular options you should use if you expect the underlying stock to go up.
- How the option striking prices should relate to the current price of the underlying stock.
- *How to figure in advance the maximum potential profit and maximum po*tential loss from a spread you're considering.

Thus you can set your own profit target. If, for example, you establish a spread only if the profit/loss ratio is 2 to 1 or better in your favor, then your goal—assuming the spread works out your way—is a return of 100% or more on the money needed to establish it.

INVITATION and GUARANTEE

If option trading is appropriate for you—with your eyes wide open to the risks as well as rewards—we invite you to try THE HOLT OPTION SELECTOR, with a 30-day money-back guarantee, and see for yourself how much it can help you pinpoint the best opportunities right now. (Complete CBOE coverage is presented one week, complete AMEX the next, in regular rotation.)

Why Holt Investment Advisory discusses . . .

Are Institutions Selling Stocks Now?

Many Wall Street experts believe that stocks are headed for a minor bull-market correction. But after the Dow average has dropped about 100 points or so, they say, the bull market will resume.

Interestingly, just about the same observation was made by analysts in both early 1969 and early 1973. On each of those occasions, a bargain-hunting rally did develop after an initial "consolidation" period. But the flurry lasted only a short while. Thereafter, stock prices resumed declining; the "technical correction" developed into a major bear retreat.

Time to Take Profits

The Holt Investment Advisory believes that at this point, it is equally unwise to misjudge the market's behavior. In a special study titled "Guess Who's Selling", the Advisory points out some of the telltale signs revealing that many financial institutions have become stock sellers. Thus, the recent retreat is conspicuously different from the typical bull-market correction.

Unless you are unalterably convinced that stock prices must trend upward through election day, we think you will want to examine for yourself why we believe now is not a time to buy stocks, but the time to take profits.

Caution: As in early 1973, Holt's current view of the market is distinctly different from the bullish stance of most Wall Streeters. (In late 1974, when the Dow was only around 600, we were also greatly outnumbered by other experts. Then, we were advising investors to buy bargains aggressively.) It is always possible that the Conventional Wisdom will be right this time.

that the compa- arranged to keep informed of the unt of money spent on adver-harges that all nies have mini- etition by refus- ing to expand their sales of private-brand breakfast cereals.

The four allegedly have discouraged competitors from entering the cereal business with various tactics including brand proliferation, intensive advertising and control of supermarket shelf space.

Perhaps most controversial of the staff's theories is the one holding that the proliferation of more than 100 cereal brands has kept competitors out by making entry extremely expensive. The big four spend as much as $10 million to introduce a new brand. Potential market entrants, the theory goes, are unwilling to risk anywhere near that much.

A number of companies have attempted to gain a foothold in the cereals business, especially with the growth of consumer interest in natural foods in recent years. But a "brief growth in granola sales by smaller firms ended," said the F.T.C. staff, when Kellogg, General Mills and Quaker Oats introduced nationally advertised brands of natural cereals.

For example, Pet Inc., a diversified food manufacturer, introduced Heartland, a granola cereal, in 1973. By March 1974 Heartland had taken a 2.7 percent share of the cereal market, the F.T.C. staff said, but by the end of 1975, had been beaten back to less than 1 percent, according to the F.T.C. staff.

Vita Crunch, another granola cereal, made by a small California concern built sales to $4.9 million in 1973. Then a decline set in and in early 1975 the concern sold the business because it no longer appeared profitable, the F.T.C. staff said.

Cereal ad budgets grew from $26 million in 1950 to $81 million in 1970, according to the F.T.C. The staff charges that many of the products "are distinguishable from one another only by some promotional gimmick," but that the advertising creates brand loyalty that in turn discourages new competitors.

And the staff argues that brand proliferation plus advertising put a premium on supermarket shelf space, which allegedly is controlled largely by Kellogg with the acquiescence of General Mills, General Foods and Quaker Oats.

No conspiracy is charged and none can be proved, says a lawyer for General Foods.

The staff brief contains tidbits of evidence, such as the statement that Ralston Purina considered selling corn flakes but ultimately decided against it because any attempt to overcome consumer preference for Kellogg Corn Flakes would cost $50 million in promotional expenses.

At the hearings that are to start this week, the staff's evidence and theories will be contradicted by other evidence and theories, including specific evidence that many brands of cereals have been discontinued, even after heavy advertising, and the general theory that advertising increases competition.

Industry rebuttals already made indicate that the confrontation will be sharp.

Gary E. Costley, a Kellogg vice-president, said "we think the F.T.C. staff's charges have no validity." Concerning Kellogg's shelf-space program, he said "we make recommendations to grocers, and they can accept or reject the recommendations. A great many reject the recommendations."

"We don't know what they mean" by product proliferation, he added. Kellogg is "unaware of any evidence to support" the conspiracy charge and the advertising charge is "an economic fairy tale that's utterly unsupportable," he said.

Howard T. Milman, a lawyer with the firm of Sullivan & Cromwell who is representing General Foods, said "The point of the complaint is whether the F.T.C. should try to restructure industries where the F.T.C. feels there are too few competitors. It makes the specific charges much less significant than in the usual anti-trust case.

"The complaint does not charge a conspiracy and I do not think that any conspiracy can be proved," Mr. Millman asserted.

General Mills, in a legal brief filed with the F.T.C., charged that the F.T.C. was attempting to engage in "comprehensive economic planning." It argued that antitrust law does not empower the agency "to experiment with industry structure."

Quaker Oats feels it should not have been named in the complaint. Luther C. McKinney, a vice president of the company, pointed out that Quaker had enlarged its original 2 percent share of the ready-to-eat cereal market to more than 7 percent, with the aid of new products. "Quaker," he said, "was trying to challenge the market leaders and what we got was a Government lawsuit."

Shared monopoly and its alleged effects on prices and competition in various industries worry not only the F.T.C.'s staff of young lawyers but also the President's Council on Wage and Price Stability, the Justice Department and some members of Congress.

The F.T.C. already has expressed its concern about televised cereal advertising that appeals especially to children.

A different kind of concern was evident when the wage-price council a year ago began a study of why wholesale and retail prices of cereal had responded little to reductions in the prices of wheat, corn and other ingredients. Subsequently, some cereal prices did decline.

The council last year also studied industry concentration, administered pricing and other factors usually associated with shared monopoly.

The study said that prices in concentrated industries appear to "behave somewhat differently" than prices in industries where many companies compete. On average, it said, concentrated industry prices "appear to rise less than competitive prices in expansions but have fallen less or risen more in recessions."

The F.T.C., having started it all with the shared monopoly charges against the cereal companies in 1972, filed a similar complaint in 1973 against the nation's eight largest oil companies. That case, which seeks to break up the oil companies, still is many months, at least, from the start of hearings.

The Justice Department brought its first, and thus far its only, shared monopoly case in 1973, charging major tire manufacturers with illegally dominating the industry. The department, however, recently dismissed the case after concluding that its evidence would not stand up in court.

Senator Philip A. Hart, the Michigan Democrat who chairs the Senate antitrust subcommittee, has sponsored antitrust legislation that would mandate the break-up of large companies in various concentrated industries, and also is a leader in the Senate fight for legislation to break up the big oil companies.

But the chances that Senator Hart's industrial de-concentration bill will pass are considered nil, and the outlook for the oil-company-break-up bill is not much better.

Therefore, the F.T.C. staff lawyers who will argue the breakfast cereal case are trying to make history.

Should the case get that far, and should the Supreme Court hold the cereal companies guilty of shared monopoly under existing antitrust law, the interpretation almost certainly could be used by the F.T.C. and Justice Department against auto, steel and other companies in concentrated industries.

But, of course, the cereal case may never reach the Supreme Court and, if it does, the outcome would be by no means certain. The next move is up to Judge Hinkes.

Expert judgment in municipal bonds...

When we don't like a municipal bond we don't let profit change our mind.

Time and time again, we have passed up the opportunity to make good profits because we wouldn't sell a bond we didn't like.

That's the reason we never sold any UDC'S, Battery Parks or New Jersey Sports Complex Bonds.

We make business judgments and we abide by them.

There are bonds around today that in our opinion lack the inherent qualities we look for on behalf of our customers. But you'll never see them on our list.

And you couldn't buy them them from us if you tried.

The Invitation expires at 5:00 P.M. New York Time on April 30, 1976, unless extended.

NJB Prime Investors (the "Trust") has invited tenders of all outstanding 7% Subordinated Debentures due March 31, 1980 (the "7% Debentures") and 6¾% Convertible Subordinated Debentures due November 1, 1991 (the "6¾% Debentures") in exchange for $22 cash net per $100 principal amount, without payment for accrued interest, upon the terms and conditions set forth in the Invitation for Tenders (the "Invitation") and in the related Letter of Transmittal. Debentures tendered may be withdrawn at any time prior to 5:00 P.M., New York Time, April 24, 1976.

The Trust will pay to any broker or dealer who is a member of any national securities exchange, the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. ("NASD") or any foreign dealer who has agreed to conform to the Rules of Fair Practice of such Association, or any commercial bank or trust company in the United States, whose name appears in the appropriate space in the Letter of Transmittal ("Soliciting Dealers"), a commission of $.75 for each $100 principal amount of Debentures purchased hereunder.

Management of the Trust believes a successful restructuring of the Trust's subordinated Debentures is critical to the Trust's viability.

The Trust's obligation to purchase Debentures tendered is conditioned on its ability to borrow funds for the tender under its Revolving Credit Agreement. There is no assurance the Trust's senior secured lenders will agree to make funds available to purchase "junior" Debentures pursuant to the Invitation although they have indicated a willingness to consider funding a tender at the same price as previously offered to Debentureholders, $20 net per $100 principal amount without payment for accrued interest.

As of March 1, 1976, the Trust had a negative net worth of $6,203,702. The Trust's purchases of Debentures pursuant to the Invitation will increase its net worth.

The Trust failed to pay interest aggregating $450,065 due March 31, 1976 on its 7% Debentures.

The Trust does not make any recommendation as to whether Debentureholders should tender or refrain from tendering. Each holder must make his own decision as to whether or not to tender and should carefully evaluate the information in the Invitation in light of his own investment objectives.

Copies of the Invitation and Letters of Transmittal may be obtained from the Trust. Debentures accompanied by Letters of Transmittal should not be sent to the Trust but to the Depositary. If you have questions, you may call the Trust's Chairman or President, collect, at 201-778-3322.

8 ways DREYFUS Liquid Assets can work for you

1 Earn income on your cash reserves even over short periods of time. If you're keeping extra money in your checking or savings account—money you don't need now but might need later—put some of it into Dreyfus Liquid Assets until you actually need it. Even if it's just for a few weeks, your money will be working for you.

2 Write checks on your Dreyfus Liquid Assets account to pay large bills. You can write a check for any amount over $500. You'll earn income right up to the day the check clears. We give you a free supply of checks. Pay your doctor, your broker, taxes, tuition—any large bill. Or take out cash for yourself.

3 Save yourself the trouble of making your own money market investments. If you've been buying notes, bills or certificates of deposit for yourself or your organization, you'll find it's a lot easier to buy Dreyfus Liquid Assets. There's no paperwork, no worrying about maturity dates, roll-overs, safe-keeping or delivery—and there's no sales charge.

4 Take care of fiduciary duties. If you're in temporary charge of someone else's money—as an executor or trustee—a Dreyfus Liquid Assets account may be an appropriate way to handle those funds. The money will be available instantly when it's needed, and until then it will be productively invested and professionally managed.

5 Give yourself a regular monthly income. You can keep your dividends reinvested in additional shares—or have them paid to you monthly or quarterly. And if you invest $5,000 or more, you can arrange to receive fixed payments of $50 or more every month or quarter. Of course, such a plan may result in your account being depleted if your withdrawals exceed your dividends.

6 Take advantage of current interest rates. Dreyfus Liquid Assets invests your money exclusively in large money market instruments. You benefit from higher interest rates than you may be able to find elsewhere, especially if you want total liquidity. And you can invest as little as $2,500.

7 Maintain liquidity and stability. As a shareholder of Dreyfus Liquid Assets, you own an interest in a very large and relatively stable pool of money market instruments. The money you invest is not tied up in any way. You can cash in your shares at net asset value at any time, or add to your investment whenever you wish (minimum $500). And because your money goes into stable short-term obligations, there is very little fluctuation in the value of your shares.

8 Diversify your portfolio. Dreyfus Liquid Assets invests only in U.S. Government securities, certificates of deposit of the largest banks, blue-chip commercial paper, and bankers' acceptances. Do you have this kind of quality and safety in your portfolio now?

Expert judgment in municipal bonds...

Our clients' municipal bond portfolios are diversified because our inventory is.

Our clients get diversified municipal bond portfolios almost automatically, because our inventory is always so well diversified.

A look at our monthly list will prove that.

We're not saying that diversification is a new idea, but we do it.

New York City bonds are a perfect case in point.

For ten years prior to its crisis, New York City bonds were far more abundant and easier to sell than other bonds. And for some New York banks and dealers New York City bonds accounted for between 50 and 90% of their sales to individuals for many of those years.

At Stoever Glass & Co., despite the fact that New York City bonds had very high yields, a good rating and were always plentiful and very much in demand, our policy of diversification limited them to 13% of our total retail sales during this period.

Because we hadn't over sold New York City bonds, we never once failed to give a client a bid for a City bond we sold him.

But more important, we had diversified their portfolios so well that very few of our clients even had to ask us for a bid.

Expert judgment in municipal bonds...

We have never failed to give a client a bid for a municipal bond we sold him.

Sometimes this is a difficult commitment but we always stand behind it. Maintaining a bid for the bonds we sell is our most important policy.

Because if we may own our client's portfolio ourselves someday, we will want to be sure that it is well diversified and that our best judgment was used in selecting the bonds in it.

We think of this as "complete cycle philosophy." The commitment to buy back any bond we've sold makes all our other commitments necessary.

And we are determined not to let saleability, availability or profitability change our mind.

Greenbacks

To the Financial Editor:

I cannot decide if it is arrogance or ignorance that makes Americans think that our green paper is the only "real money" in the world.

Your article "Dear Tourist: It's Not Money If It's Not Dollars" (April 18) is an ex*cellent study of America's* isolationist mentality and yet another illustration that this nation is ill-prepared to be a major foreign tourist attraction.

While general public ineptitude toward foreign visitors also must be changed, perhaps America's banks should take the initiative to help *encourage more foreign trav*el to the United States by making currency exchange a more accessible and less humiliating experience.

E. RONALD CULP

300 Buttons

To the Financial Editor:

Regarding the article "Campaign Buttons Losing to TV, Direct Mail" (April 4), I must take exception to the premise that few campaign buttons have been made this year. As an avid collector, I have already accumulated nearly 300 for the various candidates for President, as you can see in this picture.

The national commitees of the candidates have indeed made fewer buttons than in previous years, due to a lack of funds, but this slack has *been taken up by local com*mittees in various states, which often used these buttons for fund-raising purposes, selling them to supporters and collectors.

Many small manufacturers have benefitted. A great deal of the current button output comes from small button machines, which local campaign committees have been buying. A candidate's workers can use these machines to produce many different styles of buttons in as small or as great a quantity as they need in a short period of time, and at a low cost.

Howard Hughes

To the Financial Editor:

I protest that the name of Noah Dietrich, who was Howard Hughes's right-hand man for more than 30 years, was not mentioned even once in your article "Howard Hughes: Prime Mover in U.S. Aviation" (April 11). If Mr. Dietrich had not been instrumental in keeping the Hughes Tool Company in good operating condition, it would not have given forth the profits that Mr. Hughes needed for his T.W.A. adventures.

In addition to this, Mr. Dietrich secured additional necessary financial aid from other sources, including the Equitable Life Insurance Company, in the sum of $40 million. He also was placed in the position of watching over all TWA business for Mr. Hughes, especially with regard to keeping track of and a rein on Jack Frye, the line's former chief pilot who had become president of T.W.A.

Mr. Frye's management skills did not equal those he demonstrated in the cockpit, and when T.W.A. fell into financial jeopardy, Noah Dietrich was the one who opposed the powers supporting Mr. Frye.

These supporters included the Postmaster General, Robert E. Hannegan; and the Attorney General, Tom Clark. Mr. Dietrich, with the help of people of equal stature including Charles Halleck, then Republican leader of the House, managed to get Mr. Frye out of office. The move proved beneficial to the airline.

The fortune left by Howard Hughes would have been much smaller had it not been for the diligent work of Noah Dietrich.

An investment strategy for the rest of your life.

What investment existing today lets you put your money where it will do you the most good at every single stage of your life? What investment lets you switch from one managed portfolio to another—as the economy changes, as the market changes, as your world changes? The answer: The Oppenheimer Concept of Lifetime Money Management. Comprised of five professionally managed portfolios, it allows you to change from the most aggressive portfolio to the most conservative—or anywhere in between. Determine the strategy your money should now be taking. Just fill out the coupon below.

To The Investor Who Wants Powerful Leverage With Complete Protection Against Margin Calls And Forced Liquidations

Now there's an investment that gives you the spectacular profit potential of commodity futures trading, but without its main drawbacks—the risk of margin calls and forced liquidations.

The investment is Commodity Options. They are just recently available to Americans, although they've been traded in England for over 100 years.

Commodity Options Give You Powerful Leverage.
Depending on the type of commodity option you invest in, your leverage can run two, three, or even four to one.

You Gain Virtually Unlimited Profit Potential.
While commodity options carry less risk than commodity futures contracts, they also offer somewhat lower potential gain, since the first part of a price move must go to repay the premium. Nonetheless, you can double, triple, or even quadruple your money. In 1974, for example, when sugar moved from 13¢ a pound to 66¢, each penny of the move was worth $1120 to sugar option holders. A $4500 sugar option would have brought you more than $51,000 in profits.

Yet Your Risk Is Strictly Limited.
You can lose the premium you pay for the option—but never a cent more. There are no interest, no storage or maintenance charges. There can be no margin calls or forced liquidations.

Since there are no margin calls to worry about, you also need not worry that adverse short-term moves will force you out of the market. They can't. So you don't have to worry about day-to-day price swings.

New Free Booklet Describes Commodity Options in Detail

Commodity Options are easy to understand and can be quite useful in almost any investment program, regardless of your present familiarity with commodities or the futures market.

Now there is a special booklet which describes commodity options in clear, non-technical terms, and tells how to use them. It's published by the International Trading Group Ltd., specialists in commodity options. It answers such questions as...

- What precisely are commodity options and how can you use them? (Includes a Glossary of Terms.)
- What are the risks and benefits of buying options?
- How long do options usually run?
- Which commodities can you buy options for?
- How do you cash them in?
- Examples of typical option investments.
- How can options be used as an inflation hedge?
- A highly attractive special situation that the International Trading Group recommends for immediate action.
- How to open a Commodity Option Investment Account.

TALENTED EXECUTIVES OVER 40

Wanted 6 top notch unemployed male and female executives

To qualify you must have exceptional talent, proven track record as an executive in business or industry and can measure up to our requirements. If you meet these criteria, 40 Plus Club will help you become gainfully employed again.

40 Plus is unique in this field because it is a non-profit organization run by and for the benefit of its members and has no paid employees. Our only business is helping our members who are unemployed executives over 40 with proven management abilities. We are not a career guidance nor a resume writing organization. We charge no placement fees.

Since profit is not our motive, we devote all of our efforts toward placing our members in jobs. This includes a brief but comprehensive training program in the various proven techniques of successful job search. However, our experience over the past 36 years has shown that we must start with talented executives to maintain our placement success.

Unlike any other placement organization, we give our members an office in New York City as a base of operations; a telephone at which they can be reached by prospective employers during business hours (if they are not present a message is taken and delivered); the best private business library is at their disposal.

Since we only accept top talent, more of our members become gainfully employed, sooner, than going thru the usual route. Our records show that we average one member going to a new job every working day.

Don't waste valuable time on do-it-yourself job search . . . Come in and learn more about us and you will soon be on your way to gainful employment.

Accounting the Way to Real Profits

The Problem Is To Relate Cost to The Present Day

By RUSSELL E. PALMER

The results of last year's corporate operations are in and for many companies it was a banner year, with earnings back at their peak levels. However, there is no certainty that these record earnings reflect reality. Our present accounting system cannot cope with the unprecedented inflation of the past several years and profits in many cases have been significantly overstated because of that failing.

Businessmen often become aware of this when they find their financial position deteriorating at the same time they are reporting record earnings. The accounting profession, too, has long recognized the inadequacy of the current system of historic-cost accounting in an inflationary time, but we have been too preoccupied with other details to focus on it. The businessman and the accountant, however, must help the investing public, and others, to understand inflation's seriously distortive effect on earnings.

Reginald Jones, chief executive officer of the General Electric Company, commenting on the impact of inflation on financial statements, has said, "Business is making wrong decisions on the basis of wrong financial information." He has argued that illusory earnings encourage questionable business expansion, inappropriate payment of dividends and dangerous labor settlements.

And when William E. Simon, Secretary of the Treasury, pleaded with Congress for business tax relief a little more than a year ago, he indicated that:

¶In 1965 domestic, nonfinancial corporations reported aggregate net profits of $38 billion. In 1974 reported profit for that same group of companies was $66 billion, an apparent increase of 73 percent.

¶If reported profits were adjusted to provide for the costs of replacing inventory sold and the productive capacity consumed, 1974's earnings would be only $21 billion, compared to $37 billion in 1965—a decline in real earnings of 40 percent.

"A good part of the erosion in [real] profits in recent years," Mr. Simon said, "has been concealed by what might be called 'public relations bookkeeping.' It has been hidden from shareholders and often from management itself by accounting practices which in time of major inflation fail miserably to reflect real earnings."

What is "public relations bookkeeping"? And why are reported profits "illusory" in inflationary times? The answer lies with the use of historic costs for accounting, and can be explained the following way.

'The businessman and the accountant must help the investing public, and others, to understand inflation's distortive effect.'

Every company invests for the future. Companies invested in factories and equipment years ago with the expectation that those assets would produce revenues for many future years. In the same way, companies invested last year in inventories to be sold this year. In ordinary times, a company prices its products so that it will recover a portion of its investment in plant, equipment and inventory, plus a reasonable profit. When the products are sold, the proceeds are reinvested in new inventory, machinery and equipment.

So long as the cost of the replacement inventory or the replacement equipment is the same as in the original investment, the cycle is relatively simple: Today's sales must be priced so as to recover yesterday's invested costs, plus profit.

However, in years of high inflation, the cycle is disrupted. If a company prices this year's product to recover last year's costs, it will find the proceeds of the sale inadequate for reinvestment in inventory or equipment for next year's sales. The company may have a "profit" in terms of prior years' costs, but it will not have enough cash to regenerate the business—and also pay enough in dividends to the stockholders to keep them interested.

Our historic-cost accounting system does not measure the company's ability to regenerate itself or pay dividends. Accountants have argued over this dilemma for many years but have never felt a strong impetus to move away from the old system. Some feel that the old system is more precise than other methods because it is easy to determine what the original cost was. The fact that historic-cost profits may be irrelevant has been of secondary importance.

Accountants have proposed alternative solutions to this problem.

One approach would use replacement costs rather than historic costs. Under such a system, profit is measured by comparing today's sales prices against the cost of replacing the inventory sold and the productive capacity consumed — rather than historic costs. That system is already used by companies for internal management purposes. It enables a company to understand whether it is replacing its own capital, regenerating itself.

Another approach would restate historic costs, using a general purchasing power index. Profit would be determined by comparing sales with historic costs, after restatement.

The purchasing power approach was advocated by the old Accounting Principles Board in 1969 and again by the Financial Accounting Standards Board in 1975. Its proponents argue that the system is simple; its opponents argue it is simplistic. Inflation affects different companies differently, and changes in any one company's costs rarely correspond with changes in the general purchasing power index.

Last fall, the Securities and Exchange Commission expressed its impatience with the accounting profession and urged the adoption of replacement-cost accounting, and it finally adopted this proposal late last month. Initially, it will only be applicable to the nation's 1,000 largest nonfinancial companies. They will be required to provide supplementary information about the cost of replacing the inventory that was sold and the cost of replacing the machinery, equipment and productive facilities used during the year.

It will take some imagination to relate those ideas to specific situations, but the S.E.C. has encouraged innovation and experimentation. It has also suggested that its requirements would be extended to a broader range of companies in the future.

It is regrettable that the S.E.C. had to assume the initiative, but it is understandable in view of the severity of the problem and the fact that accountants and businessmen could not agree on a solution. Some critics see this new S.E.C. requirement as a retreat and an interference. I would rather regard it as a catalyst for businessmen and the accounting profession to develop a more responsive accounting system—a system that will provide a more realistic measure of profits available for labor settlements, dividends and taxes.

Now the business community and the accounting profession must regain the initiative. The move to a current-cost basis for accounting will raise some difficult implementation questions, the answers to which will have to be found in the halls of the S.E.C. or elsewhere. The answers can only be found as individual companies experiment with the new accounting techniques, and share the results of their experimentation.

The development of a new accounting system is an opportunity for business and accountants. But more than that, it is their responsibility to the investing public.

A Bishop's Plea to New York Businessmen

The Resurrection Of the City Calls For Commitment

The following article was excerpted from the sermon delivered on Easter Sunday, 1976, by Paul Moore Jr., Episcopal Bishop of New York.

Welcome to your Cathedral on Easter Day, an Easter full of promise but also full of foreboding. I ask you to come in your imagination with me to the edge of Morningside Heights . . . look over New York from the World Trade Center to the farthest reaches of the Bronx and weep, for your city is dying.

And before we look to our rising, before looking toward the rebirth of our city, we must look at the nature of our dying. There are many signs of dying.

Ride with me through the ghettos of our city, ride with me through the South Bronx or Harlem and see the great hulks of abandoned housing, haunts of rats and broken homeless vagabonds.

Walk with me through the corridors and cell blocks of Rikers Island and the city's jails where poor people not even yet brought to trial rot in overcrowded cells.

Listen to the broken hearts of the students of Hostos College as their one hope of training, their one hope of rising from the ghetto is mercilessly closed down.

Visit the scandal-ridden nursing homes, hear the closing of clinics in the poor areas; the litany goes on . . .

But perhaps the most sinister sign of all is the announcements that commerce and industry, the very life-blood of our town, are leaving, sensing, like rats, that the ship is sinking.

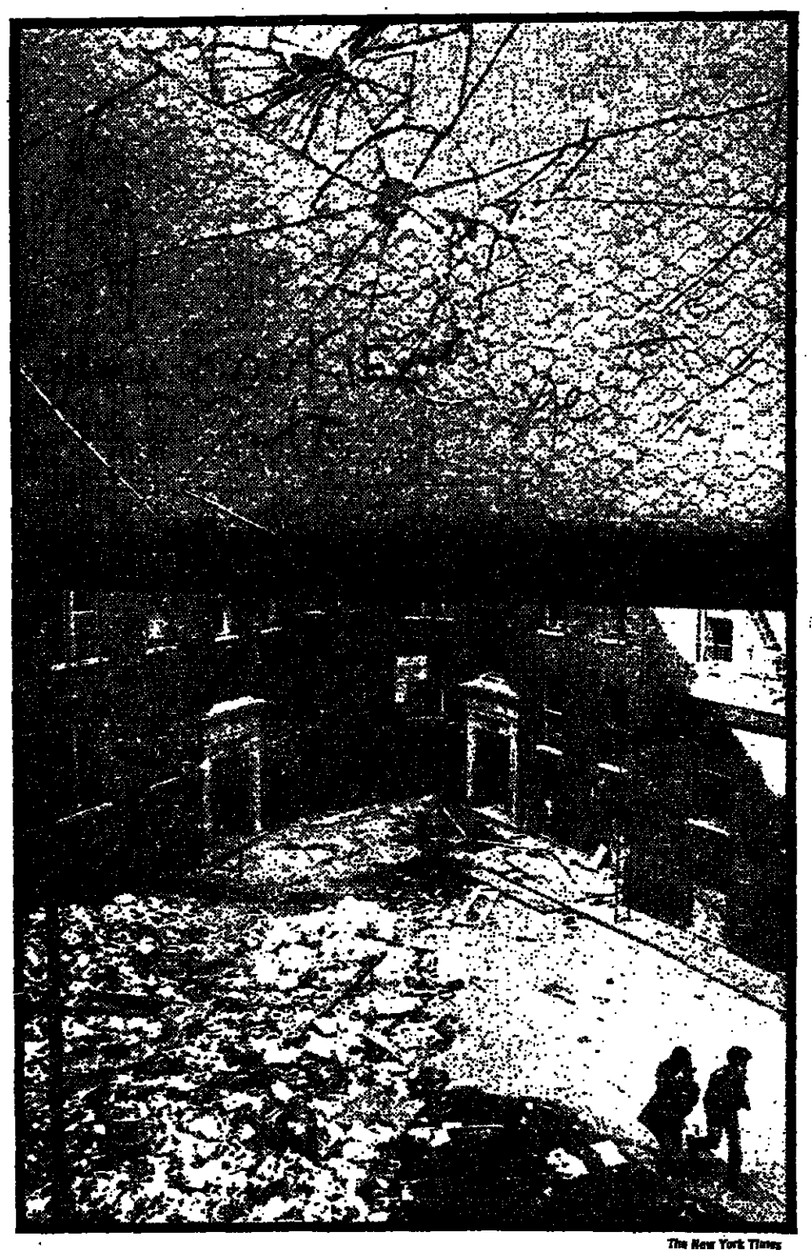
Every one of these signs of death is part of a tragic cycle, or rather a series of tragic cycles. Let us trace one down.

The decisions which lie behind these signs of death are a series of immoral decisions—even though they are clothed in financial considerations—immoral decisions on the part of the political and economic leaders on every level of government and business.

This morning I would like to single out one such decision, the decision a business makes when it decides to leave and the consequences thereof.

Industries leave the city. Therefore fewer jobs and services are needed. Unemployment rises in the black and Spanish ghettos. It is now near 50 percent and perhaps as high as 80 percent among young people. The tax base is eroded and so educational, social and health services are cut back because of the diminishing tax income to the city caused by the exodus of business.

Inner city youths are idle; more turn to addiction and violent crime. Crime frightens other New Yorkers which makes it more difficult to attract employees to the industries. In turn, more industry leaves the city. Such is a simplified description of this tragic cycle.



The New York Times

'Look over New York from the World Trade Center to the Bronx; weep, your city is dying.'

Furthermore, this cycle is exacerbated and distorted by myths.

One is the racist, guilt-fear myth surrounding crime. Although crimes of black against white are small compared to the crimes of black against black, the white man sees the statistics as a sign of his fear of black crime against himself. This is basically a racist attitude. The real cause of the high incidence of minority crime is the educational and unemployment deficit of the ghetto, caused ultimately by exploitation and neglect.

Another myth is that persons and business outside the city limits have no responsibility to the city despite the fact that the vast benefits of the metropolitan area and New York as an international center of commerce drew them here in the first place. The telephones they use, the airports where they land, the clothes they buy, the restaurants where they eat—all float on the backs of the minority groups who cannot leave the city.

Another myth is that the causes of the city's decline are economic. Not so. The symptoms are economic; the cause is moral irresponsibility. The fact that some giant corporations have stated that they are staying in New York, the fact that the banks and some other businesses must stay in New York, show that it is possible to be here and that exodus is an arbitrary decision made for the purpose of convenience and short-term economic gain.

The religious community, the loyal New Yorkers of good will, will not stand silently in the face of the betrayal of the city, whether the betrayal be by business or government. We will not take this betrayal lying down.

For if the trend continues, we can look ahead to a nightmare town, resorting to physical repression of its frustrated victims made savage by despair.

The gap between rich and poor widens. The highest one-fifth of our population receives 41 percent of the national income, the lowest one-fifth, 5.4 percent. Twenty-five million, one-tenth of the people of our country, are below the poverty level. The majority part of these are minority persons.

People flee but there is nowhere to flee. These fleeing industries are fooling themselves. People flee but there is nowhere to flee in a dying land. When industry leaves the city, the industrialized suburbs also turn to soulless urban wastelands where social irresponsibility slinks through the night to pull its victims down once more.

The struggle for the city's survival, the struggle for the soul of America, is here is being played out what may be a preview of the disintegration of the industrialist society which exploits the poor, the weak and the old and then throws them away like refuse. When this occurs, a civilization is doomed.

This sounds like a Good Friday sermon, a judgment sermon. No flowers, no Easter bunnies, no sunrise services. No. Easter is a most serious matter; we have to look clear at the dying in order to learn the means of rising.

If each of us gives him or herself with the courage of love, we will be part of the city's resurrection and our own. For courage is as contagious as fear, hope as contagious as despair.

Executives, reverse your decisions and stay in the city. Cut through the fog of statistics and see the moral decision behind them. Be part of the rising, not the dying.

There is a role for everyone, not just for the politicians and business leaders. Children and old people, join the clean-up squad on your block; adults, help teach remedial classes or man understaffed clinics. Be part of the rising, not the dying.

Do not let your group spend all its time fighting with others over a smaller and smaller piece of the pie. Unite with other persecuted people and turn the city around. Be part of the rising, not the dying.

"How is a Chevrolet dealer going to sell the smaller Impala (the full size Chevy) with the Chevelle (an intermediate) parked next to it in the dealership at the same size but a smaller price," asks William Benton, a Ford Motor Company vice president. What's more, Ford is a year behind G.M. in shrinking its big cars, but next year this could be an advantage, because the Ford will be bigger than the Chevy.

Mr. Estes says that the coming smaller big cars may have the exterior dimensions of the intermediates, but they'll be roomier inside, and fuel economy will be 3 miles per gallon better than on the '76 big models.

New Moscow Trade Center Getting a Lift From America

Détente may be in doubt, but things are looking up—and down—in Moscow for at least one American institution—the Otis Elevator Company. Otis has just landed a $3.5 million contract to install elevators and escalators in the new Moscow World Trade Center, now under construction.

Not only is this the first such contract between an American elevator builder and the Soviet Union, but the order also specifies that all the equipment will come from the United States.

The contract calls for Otis, founded in Yonkers, N. Y. in 1853, and the oldest company in the elevator business, to install 27 elevators and four escalators in the trade center. Four of the elevators will be of the glass-observation type.

According to P. F. Margasjuk, vice president of V/O Promashimport, a Soviet foreign trade agency, who signed the deal here recently, the trade center will consist of a mall, hotel, office tower and residential hotel.

Otis believes the choice of an American company for the elevator contract was made to demonstrate Moscow's receptivity to foreign products and technology. Otis recently was taken over by the United Technologies Corporation.

You Can Doze Through the Speech and Then Take It Home

Convention-goers who are bored with the speeches they must endure can now take the speeches home and be bored again.

In an age of instant communications, a few entrepreneurs around the country are finding it profitable to record conventions and other gatherings, and then sell near-instant copies of the speeches on tape cassettes.

Twenty-minutes after the speakers left the rostrum of a recent Washington, D.C., conference of the American Institute of Planners and the American Society of Planning Officials, for example, members of the audience could buy cassette recordings of their speeches for $5.25.

The proceedings were recorded by On The Spot Duplicators of Northridge, Calif., one of a handful of companies that specialize in the technique, which utilizes high speed duplicating machines that can copy a 90-minute cassette in a little more than five minutes.

The procedure works this way: The company contracts with a large organization planning a meeting to provide a free recorded copy of the entire proceedings in exchange for a concession to sell cassettes containing speeches to the audience. Usually, the organization gets a percentage portion of the sales price.

On The Spot Duplicators recorded the proceedings of the Association for Childhood Education International the National League for Nursing and the National Association of Elementary School Principals.

The development hasn't made speeches more interesting, but, it may be of modest help in shortening them; the maximum duration the cassettes can handle is 90 minutes.

Even if sales pick up and stocks are worked down—hefty rebates are offered to buyers now, just as some car makers did last year—there's more trouble down the trail. Anti-pollution standards for 1978 could push prices up sharply and cripple performance. Proposed noise regulations will hurt, too, as will the changing population, with fewer teenagers in the coming decade.

What's in a Corporate Name?

A rose by any other name would smell as sweet, said William Shakespeare, but the bard's advice seems to fall on deaf ears in the modern corporate board room, where name changes are increasingly popular.

Nearly half of the 155 companies that changed their names last year did so because they had expanded their product lines or penetrated new markets, according to an annual survey conducted by Schechter and Luth Inc.

The consulting firm, which specializes in corporate identification programs, said there had been a 25 percent increase in the number of name changes in 1975 compared to 1974.

Some companies switched names to bring about direct identification between a parent or holding company, others to avoid being confused with companies with similar names. But some of the changes were confusing in themselves. For example, the company that was formed when Missouri Beef Packers Inc. merged with Kansas Beef Industries, Inc. elected to call itself MBPXL Corporation.

"The new name is pronounced just the way you pronounce IBM—one syllable for each letter," explained MBPXL.

According to the Schechter and Luth survey, 18 companies, seven more than in 1974, "chose instant anonymity by submerging their identities in the initials game."

If inflation comes in higher than 6 percent however, this wage gain can increase only to a maximum of 8 percent. Union leaders had hoped for a stronger escalator provision.

First year wage settlements accepted by the International Ladies Garment Workers Union provided for a 5 percent pay raise effective last February and an additional 5 percent wage increase to take place during June.

A comparatively minor yet widely publicized settlement was reached by the International Airline Employees Association with National Airlines Inc. The most innovative feature of this pact stipulates that arbitration, rather than bargaining tactics, is to be used to resolve all future economic differences.

In contrast, noneconomic differences will continue to be settled by negotiation. Strikes and lockouts are prohibited. As long as this arbitration pact is in effect, salaries are guaranteed to rise at least 5 percent a year—with the union still free to negotiate for more.

The ominous trucking negotiations also reached a settlement following a three-day strike. The new contract accepted by the Teamsters Union calls for about a 10 percent increase in wages and benefits during the first contract year—with no extra padding from cost-of-living provisions.

Such provisions will take effect only during the remaining two contract years. Assuming consumer price increases run at a 6 percent annual rate during each of these two years, annual wage and benefit gains received by the Teamsters should run in the neighborhood of 10 percent. Although these escalator provisions will no longer be constrained by a ceiling, the technicalities of tuning salaries to changes in the cost of living appear to be in line with those of other settlements.

During 1977, teamsters salaries are set to rise 1 cent per hour for each 4.4 percentage point increase in the C.P.I. (1957-59=100) during 1976. 1978 Salaries in 1978 are scheduled to rise 1 cent per hour for every 0.3 percent rise in the C.P.I. using a 1967 base period.

Actually this settlement proved less costly than several trucking groups had feared. As a result, they have already lowered by 1 percentage point the requested rate increases that are already pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission. Currently, rate increases sought for truckload shipments as a direct result of the Teamsters' latest pact appear to be running in the neighborhood of 6 percent.

As far as upcoming negotiations are concerned, however, the picture is still mixed. The uncapped escalator provision won by the Teamsters will undoubtedly have some effect on future bargaining involving other unions. At this point, both the United Rubber Workers and the unions in electrical manufacturing are looking for wage and benefit increases large enough to make up for ground lost because of inflation.

However, high unemployment still tends to undercut labor's bargaining stance. In fact, the United Auto Workers—in the biggest single union negotiation of the year—have announced plans to emphasize job security rather than hourly wage increments.

Even if these later wage settlements are high, they will not necessarily mean a return to double-digit inflation. Current wage settlements are not the only determinant of the overall wage rate. In any given year, "effective" wage gains—that is, the wage increment actually paid to all workers under collective-bargaining decisions — can differ widely from specific wage gains negotiated during the year.

The effective wage gain, as tracked by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, depends in part on current settlements. But it also depends on the contracts already in effect—and these can help blunt some of the upward thrust of new settlements.

Moreover, as inflation continues to wind down, so will labor's catch-up wage demands. Even in this heavy bargaining year, new wage settlements will cover only about 5 percent of the civilian labor force, while deferred wage gains will go to an additional 5 percent. There is also some indication that nonunion wages respond more rapidly to changes in the inflation rate. Therefore, current bargaining negotiations will not necessarily provide an accurate seeding of wage movements throughout the economy.

Last year provided a case in point. The settlements negotiated in 1975 provided for a 10.2 percent average increase in wages for the first contract year—and for a 7.8 percent average annual increase over the full life of the contracts signed, up from the increases of 9.8 percent and 7.3 percent, respectively, negotiated in 1974.

In other words, labor won fatter contracts in 1975 than in 1974. But in spite of this, the average effective wage gain in 1975 was 8.7%, or seven-tenths of a percentage point below 1974.

More important, for the private sector as a whole, 1975's wage gain came in even lower than the increase indicated by the provisions of the first-year wage settlements. Gross average hourly earnings for production or nonsupervisory workers in nonagricultural industries rose 7.6 percent during 1975, compared to 7.7 percent in 1974. This spread is not unusual.

In seven of the eight years since 1968, the first year for which comparable data are available, average effective wage gains have run below average first-year negotiated wage increases. And increases in average hourly earnings have held below effective wage gains in five out of eight years.

THE ECONOMIC SCENE

s a Boom on the Way?

By THOMAS E. MULLANEY

FTER its stellar performance in the year's first quarer, one that proved to be better than expected in several important aspects, the American economy might soon shift into still higher gear—boom speed reatening a return of some of the old dangers that to the last traumatic recession.

ew analysts have publicly voiced any fears at this it that the economy might indeed be on the verge of angerous acceleration. And with so many positive ors in the picture, it might be premature to raise the stion at this point, but some economists have suged in private discussions that at least the possibility ht to be recognized.

ne Wall Street economist said he doubted that a new away boom was in the making "unless we soon get er plant and equipment expenditures into the rery parade."

conomist Otto Eckstein of Data Resources Inc. also l that the indicators "did not signal boom excesses," he added that "it is really too early for these signs levelop."

owever, one prominent bank economist cited the suringly fast pace of the expansion the last few months, the stronger tone of recent capital-investment orders, easons to suggest that the "possibility of a new boom not be ruled out now."

What concerns him and, some others, is the evidence, ht as it is at the moment, that some of the laggard tors of the economy might be about to spring to life. hey all do, and if the fast-moving consumer-spending ponent does not simultaneously cool off, the condis would be created for a general expansion of ecoic activity into a new, unstable boom.

f the present personal savings rate of 7.6 percent, ich is relatively high by historical standards, should line by just 1 percent, one analyst noted, it would l $12 billion to the spending stream and place sigicant added pressure on the demand side.

With industrial production up 10 percent and employnt growing by 3 percent in the recovery, the workek has been lengthening and personal incomes have n steadily rising. And last week it was announced t Social Security and Federal welfare benefits would increased by 6.4 percent in July, adding more than billion annually to the spending potential. Meanwhile, ge increases being negotiated in this year's heavy labos gaining calendar promise to be substantial.

While the lion's share of public attention and press adlines last week was devoted to the positive elements the Government's reports on the gross national product d the consumer price index, there were some other s-publicized data that might have been even more aningful as a guide to the economy's probable course the near future.

The G.N.P. and the price statistics were highly favore. Though preliminary, they both depicted a vigorousrecovering American economy in a highly favorable lationary climate.

Real growth increased at an annual rate of 7.5 percent, en most forecasters were predicting 7 percent or less, d the overall inflation rate (as measured by the G.N.P. lator) slowed to 3.7 percent, not even that half of the ceding quarter. The first-quarter increase in consumer ces was even more cheerful, running at an annual e of only 2.9 percent.

Subsequently there were other reports that indicate it the economic pace might be quickening. There was unusually large jump in durable-goods orders in rch — 6.5 percent —, and many companies have reted significant increases in both new orders and entories over the last six to eight weeks. Also conuing an amazing spurt have been auto sales — up percent in the latest report.

The inventory situation bears particular attention. It is the sharp rundown in inventories in 1974 that ntributed so importantly to the depth of the last ession, and it was the tardiness of their replenishment this recovery that has prevented the economy from nerating even greater steam so far.

Normally, economists point out, inventory rebuilding gins to appear within one to five months after the neral economy starts to turn upward from recession, t this time more than nine months passed before re was any sign of any upward swing in that key indicator. The business world, which had been burned so badly by the economic contraction from late in 1973 until April of 1974, wanted to be certain that the economic comeback was not illusory.

Now, apparently, many retailers and manufacturers seem to be convinced that the recovery is solid and likely to be sustained for perhaps another year or more. They have been impressed by the sustained strength of auto and other retail sales, and they have been able to improve their own financial picture by reducing shortterm debt and improving their liquidity. Now they may be disposed to greater inventory investment and steppedup capital spending.

The general robustness of corporate profits in recent quarters has been a major factor in the improvement of corporate financial positions, of course.

Early returns of first-quarter earnings indicate one of the strongest year-to-year gains in some time. The results reflect the economic upturn to some extent, but they also are benefitting from the fact that a comparison is being made with the period a year ago when the recession was at its trough.

The aggregate net profit of the first 463 companies reporting on this year's first quarter amounted to $4.31 billion, up 34 percent from a year ago, according to a tabulation by Citibank. When a broader sampling is available, the quarter's gains may run to 40 percent or so, but gains later this year may be less elevated for two reasons: comparison with stronger quarters in 1975 and a possible less favorable cost position if labor, money, material and other expenses of doing business rise, as expected, under strong demand conditions.

Labor costs, dramatized by the inflationary 30 percent wage boost won by the truckers, have already started to increase, and so have the costs of many goods that business purchases for its operations. The cost of money may be the next advancing element.

Money-market specialists believe that short-term interest rates will begin to turn firmly upward soon, perhaps as early as next month, and continue on an upward track all year. By the end of 1976, short-term rates should be up by at least 1 percentage point. That would lift the three-month Treasury bill rate, for example, from its present 4.9 percent level to the area above 5.80 percent, or perhaps even significantly higher.

Long-term rates may remain more stable, but their fate hinges on the level of inflation—and the prospect there is certainly for some acceleration of the low rate that prevailed in the first quarter.

What happens to interest rates will depend on the Federal Reserve's monetary policy. So far, the Fed has been keeping monetary policy meticulously stable, but some doubts on that score arose late last week. Its earlier highly accommodative actions facilitated the economic recovery, but the credit markets have been nervous recently, worrying that the Fed will tighten up when the business loan demand begins to pick up and when general prices rise faster.

There doesn't seem to be much reason for concern on that score just yet, but there have been some ominous stirrings on the price front.

Steel, aluminum, copper and other metals have been moving upward, and so has the sensitive Government price index of 13 industrial raw materials. If food and energy prices, which had been declining or stable, start strongly upward again, the inflation picture would darken perceptibly and raise the specter of tighter Fed monetary policy—perhaps by late spring or early summer.

Those who have minimized the danger of a new runaway boom in the American economy have been taking comfort in the belief that the economy's laggards —housing, investment and net foreign trade—will remain rather lackadaisical for some time ahead; that Washington and business will not forget the hard lessons of the past, and that there is still enough slack in the economy to permit more stimulus. The latter point is debatable for some industries, however.

The real question now, as Dr. Eckstein suggested, is this: "Will private and public decision-makers act on long-range economic assumptions that would produce balanced economic growth for the rest of this decade, or will a period of rapid improvement breed unsustainable expectations, which will induce excessive inventory restocking, excessive use of consumer credit, and selfdefeating price and wage behavior?"

The current quarter may provide a large part of the answer, and maybe sooner than many people think.

It might be well for Government, labor and business to keep in mind the admonition of the philosopher-poet Santayana: "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it."

MARKETS IN REVIEW

Dow Climbs to 39-Month High

Fed by favorable economic and corporate news, the ck market climbed last week to its highest level 39 months. The peak was reached on Wednesday, en the Dow Jones industrial average wound up at 011.02, giving the blue-chip indicator its highest closing ce Jan. 23, 1973. The Dow's net gain last week came 20.23 points.

Data from Washington indicated a declining rate of lation and a pickup in business activity, thereby oviding a tonic to the stock market. On the corporate nt, the flow of first-quarter earnings continued to esent Wall Street with better-than-expected results. An impressive number of stocks, meanwhile, posted ir highest prices of 1976. This list ranged from Ashnd Oil and Borg Warner to Stanley Works, Motorola d Santa Fe International.

Also viewed as a bullish sign for the stock market was the swing in trading volume. Turnover rose when prices climbed and declined when prices fell. Volume on the New York Stock Exchange for the week totaled 103.78 million shares. This compared with a turnover of 65.55 million shares in the previous week, when the Good Friday holiday meant a four-day trading period.

Bond prices rose early last week—triple-A utilities, for example, traded at their highest prices and lowest yields in two years—and then declined late in the week on fears that the Federal Reserve Board might tighten credit conditions. These fears—thought to be premature by some seasoned market analysts—followed sharp increases in the latest money-supply figures.

3 PRODUCT MANAGEMENT OPPORTUNITIES
Broadcast Equipment

If you have expertise in any of these areas, it's highly unlikely that you could discover a better company to be affiliated with than ours. We're the leader in TV and radio broadcast equipment and as a division of a major Fortune 500 Corporation, HARRIS, soundly financed and geared for growth.

Among several outstanding potential-packed career opportunities currently available are these 3 managerial spots which call for B.S.E.E.'s (M.B.A. desirable) plus experience as outlined in further detail below: you each must be responsive and sensitive to people, and able to communicate effectively both orally and in writing.

2 PRODUCT MANAGERS
Experienced in: TV-RF or Audio/Automation

A minimum of 10 years product management/development experience is required. You each should have a record of increasing responsible product-related experience in the electronics equipment industry with particular emphasis as indicated:

- TV-RF — TV Transmitters
- AUDIO/AUTOMATION — Audio and/or Program Automation Equipment

Prior decision making responsibilities should have involved product concepts based on the technological environment, customer requirements, and economic consideration. You should have technical and economic analytical abilities essential to product decision making.

Reporting to the Vice President of Product Management, you'll each utilize existing functional organizations to carry out overall responsibility for the profitability of a specific line both manufactured and resale. New product responsibilities encompass identification and screening, development of business plans, and securing management authorization. In addition, you'll be responsible for planning overall product programs—i.e., defining, developing, introducing as well as production and phaseout. As Product Managers, you must be cost conscious—mindful of: budget and technical goals, achievement of product acceptance, sales and profits, and other established objectives.

ASSISTANT PRODUCT MANAGER

Your Degree in Engineering or a related Science should be augmented by a minimum of 3 years experience in design, product planning, or marketing of broadcast video equipment. You should have experience in a broadcast station atmosphere or production house background and familiarity with station needs for a full range of TV studio equipment. You must possess the personal drive and desire necessary to allow you to assume the position of Product Manager within 2 years.

You'll provide assistance in planning, coordination and supervision of the overall product line including full profit and loss responsibilities. In addition you'll be responsible for new product development and developing OEM resale agreements.

We offer salaries commensurate with experience and the challenging demands inherent in these opportunities. We will also provide you with an excellent benefits package. Send resume indicating position desired, with salary history and requirement, in confidence to:

Our leading Agent made more than $200,000 last year.

Many companies set limits on how much their sales people can earn. We don't. With us, it's up to you: the more you sell, the more you earn.

And now we're looking for just 6 unusual people—men or women—to take part in a special training experience with one of the most successful of our more than 7,000 Agents. Dedicated and thoroughly professional, he's sold more than $100 million of life insurance in the last 10 years. What's more, he's one of our all-time leading Agents in commissions earned. Not surprisingly, he's won just about every industry and company award there is.

Now, he and his top-flight associates are looking to develop a special sales team—a few select individuals who'll work alongside our top salesmen, right from the start.

You'll learn how to program a variety of plans for individuals and families. And, you'll be given a solid foundation in the more advanced areas of life insurance estate planning, business insurance, pensions and group insurance.

Other important advantages include: a contract, as long as sales standards are met, which provides a liberal regular salary during the three years of training, plus commissions; an outstanding benefit program, including an investment plan and a company-paid pension plan, as soon as you qualify; a convenient mid-town location, with no boundaries to your sales territory.

Can you qualify for this opportunity of a lifetime? If you have a record of success, feel held back by your present job, and are willing to reach out to achieve your potential, you may be one of the exceptional people we're looking for. (A college degree is desirable but not essential.) Take the first step toward reshaping your future by sending your resume today to:
